Fears we'll pay high price for money-saving merger

By Marijke Cox

marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

LABOUR campaigners have slammed moves to appoint one chief executive to run Dover and Shepway councils, claiming any financial savings will be swallowed up in consultancy fees.

Opponents to the plans also stressed that any cash savings made will be cancelled out by redundancy payments, which could soar to almost £600,000 should neither of the current chiefs get the post.

Dover District Council (DDC) boss Nadeem Aziz and Shepway's (SDC) Alistair Stewart are both in a redundancy pool for possible selection for the chief executive role.

The successful applicant will be in charge of a shared management team due to be in place next year.

Proposals for the joint chief executive were given the go-ahead in March, with the position expected to be filled by June.

In addition to the changes, Dover and Shepway will continue with the East Kent Shared Services Scheme, which has seen collaborated facilities, including waste and housing, with Canterbury and Thanet.

Labour's Kent County Council representative for Dover, Gordon Cowan, heaped criticism on the joint chief executive plan, calling it an "ill-advised marriage" and claiming at least £25,000 will be paid to consultants and lawyers dealing with the merge.

"This decision by the current Conservative administration at Dover is another disaster for the district council," he said. "Any short-term savings will be swallowed up in redundancy payments and consultancy fees."

Labour spokesman for local government finance at DDC, Mike Eddy, stressed that Dover and Shepway had "very little" in common.

"It may be a marriage of political convenience at the moment," he said.

Shepway has pulled out of most of the shared services which Dover has with other East Kent councils, but more importantly Shepway's council tax levels are substantially higher than those in Dover and Deal. It is clear the Conservatives on DDC will want to bring council tax levels in line with Shepway's."

Clr Eddy accused the Tory cabinet of being "determined to waste several thousands of pounds" on the move.

A DDC spokesman said in terms of legal support costs with Shepway around £2,000 had been spent to date.

A Shepway council spokeswoman said although the authority had not yet been invoiced, bosses expected the legal consultancy costs to be between £1,500 and £2,000.

She added: "We also paid £90 for the use of the Clifton Hotel, Folkestone, for one of the joint meetings – £50 for hire of room and £40 for teas/coffees etc."

Cuts in Government funding at DDC total £3.2 million over the next two years and at Shepway £3.3m.

The move is expected to save each council £50,000 a year.

Families' dismay at threat to 'one of a kind' drop-in centre

PARENTS have reacted with fury over the possible closure of a drop-in centre which supports hundreds of vulnerable families in Shepway.

B-4-8s, based in Town Walk, Folkestone, could close as soon as June if it fails to secure crucial funding. The charity helps disadvantaged and vulnerable families with problems including poverty, employment, stress and relationship breakdowns through its Early Years Support project.

Manager Kevin Bennett said he sees up to 10 families a day with a variety of needs and that the charity had helped thousands during its 15-year history.

Worried parents have lobbied Shepway council and Kent County Council to try to secure funding.

Mr Bennett said KCC previously provided a grant of £5,000 - 10 per cent of the £50,000 needed to run the service, but with a funding review under way only £2,500 over six months was available. Other funds came through charitable trusts, which were unable to continue supporting the project.

"This isn't just a service offering information and support, it gives people the chance to meet other parents," he said. "We're looking after 2,500 families a year and it costs about £20 to support each one. I don't think value for money is an issue. Parents are very upset. They see the value of the project and how much it's needed."

In a report to KCC, Mr Bennett outlined the importance of the charity, stressing how crucial it was for families experiencing multiple disadvantages.

"B-4-8s helps advise and support parents, we help them gain confidence and we offer information covering a range of needs," he said. "But we can't survive past June - we need a lifeline."

Parents reacted with dismay at the possible closure. One mother said: "In a time when we are all struggling, having a place that is not only welcoming but free is so valuable," she said.

"People thought the Coalition would bring positive change, but all it's doing is shattering communities by withdrawing the centres, charities and people who support us. I know local government-run centres are suffering budget cuts, but they'll still be open and providing services. B-4-8s will be gone for ever. It's a one-of-a-kind charity."

KCC cabinet member for children's services Cllr Jenny Whittle said families in Folkestone had told her how much they valued B-4-8s.

"KCC helped fund the service last year," she said. "We have pledged further funding into this financial year, initially for six months."

"The charity needs to attract funding from other sources. Staff at County Hall are happy to meet with the trustees to offer advice on future KCC funding and other grant opportunities."

A Shepway official said the council was among those who supported the setting up of B-4-8s and contributed £35,000 in 1997.

"Mr Bennett has done a tremendous job," she said. "No one has contacted us directly but we would be willing to present any request for funding to our cabinet for consideration."

EXHIBITION

Artist takes A Modest View of the world

AN ILLUSTRATOR is to launch his first solo exhibition of energetic cityscape paintings in Folkestone's Creative Quarter.

Ewen Macaulay, from Seabrook, near Hythe, will unveil his work at George's House Gallery in the old high street, which is fast becoming a popular area for artists and creative businesses.

The 37-year-old, who works freelance at Oak Creative in Hythe, said his 25 paintings include international cityscapes along with paintings showcasing Folkestone and animals.

The exhibition is called A Modest View.

"I am a little private about my work and I suppose modest about my painting," he said. "I am not pretentious about art and believe it's for everyone to enjoy."

"I hope people take away the thought they have seen some original art and leave with some inspiration."

"This is an exploration of my love of painting, architecture, cities and life, with each piece reflecting the energy and emotion exercised to create it."

"The work on display represents my attitude towards creating art - it should be modest, accessible and invoke positive feeling within the viewer."

SELECTED WORKS: Clockwise from top are Times Square, Piccadilly Circus and a gorilla

Mr Macaulay said he had painted on and off for years but it was not until last year's Folkestone Art Society Summer Exhibition, where he displayed four paintings, that he started to paint seriously.

"I had such amazing feedback and encouragement from everyone regarding the paintings I submitted and I sold one," he said.

His work has been featured in The Fairfax Gallery in Tunbridge Wells; the Singing Soul Gallery in Cranbrook; Peche Art in Sandgate; and Battle Contemporary Art Fair in Hastings.

"A friend and I also made a film of me painting, incidentally the painting I sold at the Folkestone Art Society exhibition, and it is available to watch on the YouTube website," he added.

For more about the exhibition, which is sponsored by Oak Creative and runs from April 22 to May 4, see www.strangecargo.org.uk/gallery/exhibition/modest-view.

Overlooked in regeneration game

By Steve Knight

steve.knight@archant.co.uk

KENT'S regeneration plans have taken another hit after the county failed to win a single penny from the £450 million Regional Growth Fund.

Deputy Prime Minister Nick Clegg and Lord Michael Heseltine have provisionally accepted 50 bids for support from firms and partnerships across the UK, but the South East has again been overlooked as the bulk of the cash heads north.

Of 17 applications from the Kent, Essex and East Sussex Local Enterprise Partnership (LEP) area, only one – for the e2v Technologies firm in Essex – was successful.

It is thought at least six Kent bids, including one related to the Port of Sheerness and another to upgrade the railway line between Canterbury and Ashford, were turned down.

The announcement marks the fourth week running that Kent has been snubbed by the Government after controversial decisions relating to the allocation of Enterprise Zones and the 'fire sale' of assets owned by the South East England Development Agency (Seeda).

"That the South East generates most money for the Exchequer has been to our disadvantage," said Jo James, chief executive of Kent Invicta Chamber of Commerce.

"The Government should be looking at an area that has created wealth and be supporting it further, not starving it so other parts of the country can be brought up to our level."

Five weeks ago the Government decided against making the Pfizer site in Sandwich an Enterprise Zone, despite the expected loss of up to 5,000 jobs when the drugs giant leaves next year. Days later it emerged ministers expect to allocate no more than one zone per LEP area for 10 remaining EZs, meaning Kent could be penalised for being part of one of the largest LEPs in the country.

The county was further hit by news that land and property owned by Seeda will be sold to the highest bidder rather than passed into local authority control, sparking fears that important regeneration projects could be further delayed.

County council leader Paul Carter has repeatedly warned the Government to not be fooled into thinking the South East does not have pockets of deprivation.

He said: "The message is slowly getting through, but it was Lord Heseltine and others whose job it was to sift through the growth fund applications, and Mr Clegg who made the final decision. So no matter what other ministers want to do, it's the panel that will decide.

"Disappointed would not be the right word because I wasn't very optimistic, bearing in mind the noises from certain people that the South East would not be a significant recipient.

"But just because it sees us as having a prosperous economy does not mean we shouldn't have an even more prosperous economy. Why not grow what we've already got? That would be a better use of public money."

Clr Carter said he was hopeful Kent would fare better when the second round of funding, worth about £1 billion, is announced in the summer.

The Regional Growth Fund was created to replace the nine Regional Development Agencies, including Seeda, axed by the Coalition.

But while the first round of funding promises to create 27,000 jobs, none will be in Kent.

Kent Labour spokesman Paul Clark said: "The Tories in opposition were fully supportive of regeneration projects like the Thames Gateway, yet we've seen no successful bids going there.

"We also had growth boards such as Ashford's Future and Medway Renaissance which have gone to the wall because of cuts. The view that the South East is already successful was the same in the mid-1990s. It took 13 years to change that perception but now it seems the clocks have been turned back."

EDUCATION

KCC makes case for BSF reprieve

EDUCATION chiefs have made their case for restoring axed Building Schools for the Future projects in Kent.

Two months ago, Kent County Council defeated the Government in a joint legal action with five other local authorities after proving Education Secretary Michael Gove failed to consult with them before scrapping the £55 billion scheme.

Mr Gove was forced to reconsider some axed projects and set a deadline of April 11 for the councils to provide him with "any and all" information about the ones they would like him to look at.

KCC's submission includes details on 15 secondary schools - all but one of which are in either Thanet or Gravesham - that were next in line for BSF funding. Cllr Paul Carter said he was confident Mr Gove was revisiting his decision in a "fair and thorough way".

BSF was introduced by Labour in 2003 in an attempt to improve every secondary school in the country.

Kent's programme - the largest building scheme in Europe - was worth £1.8bn.

The 14 to be reconsidered by Mr Gove were all 'Wave Four' projects that were at the most advanced stages of planning.

Mr Gove is due to respond to KCC's submission in the summer, but warned he was under no obligation to save any of the schools affected.

He said: "As the judge made clear, the final decision on any given school or project still rests with me and I may save all, some, a few or none. 'No-one should gain false hope.'

FINANCE

Court's 'preferential creditor' ruling boosts County Hall's frozen Icelandic £50m hopes

AN ICELANDIC court ruling has edged Kent County Council a step closer to recovering most of the £50 million frozen in the country.

The authority has so far recovered only a fraction of the money it had tied up in Iceland's banking system, which collapsed in September, 2008.

So far, KCC has received £9.1m from the UK-based Heritable bank, which owes £18m, but nothing of the £17m placed with Landsbanki or £15m with Glitnir.

A court case in Iceland last week concluded local authorities should be considered as preferential creditors when it comes to distributing the assets of the latter two banks.

But KCC cabinet member for finance, Cllr John Simmonds, said it would be two to three years until the majority of the cash had been recovered.

He said: "There's a chance of an appeal because there are quite a few bondholders who will be miffed. We felt the judgement was clear, but they've got a lot at stake as well."

"If there is an appeal, we have been told a final verdict would be delivered by the end of June, but it will probably take about three years for the assets to unravel anyway."

"We always forecast we'd recover 90-92 per cent of the money, but it may even be a bit more if the economy picks up over the next few years."

CASHFLOW: KCC had £50m frozen after Iceland's banking collapse in 2008

Clr Simmonds said that despite the £50m being the most lost by any local authority in the UK, it had had no effect on the running of the council.

He said: "There's always about £250m-plus in our coffers so we have been able to manage the cash flow without having to cut back what we do. It hasn't affected frontline services and had nothing to do with this year's budget.

"Things would have been different if we'd lost the money because we would have had to boost reserves somehow."

The Local Government Association said the court ruling meant taxpayers in the UK could see savings of as much as £400m as a result.

CHILDREN'S SERVICES

'I know how to tackle issues in KCC's child protection'

By Steve Knight

steve.knight@archant.co.uk

THE troubleshooter brought in to tackle Kent's child protection woes says he will take no prisoners in turning the service around.

Last year Kent County Council received a 'poor' rating as part of Ofsted's annual assessment of children's services, which followed an earlier inspection that rated the authority's safeguarding and looked-after children services as "inadequate".

The situation worsened this week when it was revealed that 327 at-risk youngsters had gone missing from a system that already contained 2,700 who had not been allocated a case worker.

But despite the obstacles in his path, Malcolm Newsam – the interim managing director of children, families and education – says he is positive KCC can turn things around.

He said: "The big advantage of being on a short-term contract is that I can come in and be entirely focused on what needs to be done and tell it like it is. If I upset people, so be it. My only job is to improve the service as much as possible.

"Short-term managers like me can hold a mirror up to an organisation and say, 'This is what needs to happen', and KCC is receptive to that.

"Because I have experience in turning other child protection services around, I come with solutions I know have worked."

Last month KoS exclusively revealed how KCC was paying an employment agency £1,250 a day for the services of Mr Newsam, who started on January 4 and is expected to remain until the autumn.

His predecessor, Rosalind Turner, took voluntary redundancy when her job title was removed as part of a restructure of senior management. Mr Newsam says his immediate goals

ELECTION DELAY ANGER

OPPOSITION leaders have accused Kent's ruling Tory group of sweeping the council's child protection failings under the carpet.

Lib Dem Cllr Trudy Dean and Labour's Cllr Leslie Christie are angry at not being allowed to discuss the plan for improving services to children at risk until after the local elections on May 5.

Cllr Dean said: "KCC must explain how its services failed these children so miserably and what it is intending to do about it. Sweeping it under the carpet just makes people think there is more to hide.

"Twenty-four hours after (KCC leader) Paul Carter told us the council would be open about these serious failings, I was told we were not allowed to question councillors and officers. It is an attempt to keep this out of the public eye until after the May 5 elections, which is outrageous."

Cllr Dean is chair of the cabinet scrutiny committee and had been hoping to discuss the improvement plan at last Wednesday's meeting, but has been told she must wait until after the next cabinet meeting on May 23.

Cabinet member for specialist children's services Cllr Jenny Whittle said she was "incandescent" at the assumption that KCC was not being transparent.

Cllr Whittle said it was she who revealed there were 2,700 at-risk children who had no allocated case worker, adding that Cllrs Dean and Christie had been invited to sit on one of three new panels set up to oversee the improvements.

AT RISK:

There are no quick fixes in turning around Kent's troubled child protection service but interim MD Malcolm Newsam, below, says improving matters will be the main focus of his team's efforts and they will succeed include clearing up a huge backlog of referrals, improving leadership among the team, and making sure Kent is seen as a good place for social workers to practice. But he warned there was no quick fix in turning the service around. Every council I work in wants things to get better immediately," he said. "But I always have to say that while we will concentrate on taking risk out of the system as soon as possible, there are no silver bullets. It's a long-term project, the first phase of which is to take the millstone off social workers. That's why we are bringing in a team of 30 who will move around the county to help remove the backlog, hopefully by the end of August. It should take 12 months for the service to be immeasurably better, but it's going to take two to three years to get where the council wants to be, which is an Ofsted rating of 'good' or 'outstanding'. We've got to get out of the hole we've dug and we absolutely will be able to achieve that."

NEWS IN BRIEF

► Racist abuse of PC

A TEENAGER from Maidstone received a hefty fine after being found guilty of racially abusing a policeman.

Caleb White, 19, of Quarry Road, was told to pay £515 by county town magistrates after being found guilty of racial abuse and harassment.

Magistrates heard White levelled a tirade of insults at PC Gabriel Chandler when the officer went to his home on December 27, last year, including threatening to pour water on the officer from a first-floor window.

The court was played a recording of White making racist comments and found him guilty.

Det Sgt Tristan Stevens, of the hate crime unit, said: "Racial abuse will be robustly dealt with by Kent Police regardless of who the victim is. No officer should ever have to tolerate such abuse for simply doing their job."

► Calling student bands

STUDENT bands are being offered the chance to line up alongside the likes of Katherine Jenkins and McFly.

Demelza Hospice Care is holding its first Music on the Hill festival, on June 24-26, and schools and colleges are invited to select their favourite student band for a chance to take part.

The winning band, as judged by DJ Dave Berry, will appear before an audience of about 5,000 people to perform two tracks.

They will appear on the same Kings Hill, West Malling, stage as X Factor's Stacey Solomon, ABC and Bjorn Again. Call 01323 446468 or email sarah.marsh@demelza.org.uk for details.

Maidstone audiences deadpan the funnymen

By Chris Murphy

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

PRETTY much all Northern clubs are renowned for having tough comedy audiences, but it turns out Maidstone is actually one of the hardest places to make people laugh, according to a survey of stand-up comics.

Researchers interrogated some of Britain's best-loved comedians and asked where the nation's most humourless audiences live.

The majority voted for the Merseyside region, claiming audience members often think they are funnier than the acts they've paid to go and see.

Nottingham was voted as the second hardest place to crack, amazingly followed by Maidstone.

The study was commissioned by cable TV channel Dave, which calls itself the home of witty banter, to mark the launch of the Dave's One Night Stand series.

More than 100 comedians took part in the research including Bill Bailey, Jo Brand, Tim Vine, Dave Gorman, Rhod Gilbert, Mark Watson, Jason Byrne and Greg Davies.

They said the South East is the third best region for political jokes, and top for satirical humour.

The 18-25 year olds are the gloomiest because as one said: "Young audiences are often too busy texting to listen."

In contrast, the ideal age range for a comedy audience was said to be 26-33 year olds.

Dave's channel boss, Steve North said "Being a stand up has to be one of the hardest jobs in the world. And these guys do it for fun."

In 2008 funnyman Alan Carr branded Maidstone racist, sexist and homophobic, and said its audiences were the worst he had faced.

He said: "They hated me. It was full of homophobic narrow-minded morons. And it wasn't just me. If you were black or Asian, you got racist abuse."

Carr – the son of former Maidstone United manager Graham Carr – claimed he might get away with attending a book signing in the town "because half the people there can't read".

Native wildlife given a boost with £110m rivers clean-up cash

OTTERS could make a welcome return to Kent's waters thanks to a £110 million scheme set to freshen up the country's river system.

The Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (Defra) says the money will be used to improve the health of more than 880 lakes, streams and other water bodies, with the aim of attracting species previously driven away by pollution, invasive weeds, and man-made structures.

According to Environment Secretary Caroline Spelman, the cash – which will be shared between the Environment Agency, Natural England and a variety of civil society associations – will be of particular benefit to otter, salmon and other fish.

The announcement was welcomed by chairman of Protect Kent, Richard Knox-Johnston.

He said: "All the waterways in Kent would benefit from a clean-up, and I'm particularly thinking of the Medway, where we haven't had otters for ages.

"The Stour is another one, so it would be nice to see them come back."

"I think it's high time we cleaned up these rivers and made them much more attractive for people to walk along and use in general."

About £92m of the funding from Defra will be provided

COME BACK: It is hoped the work will encourage otters to return over the next four years. This will be to remove non-native invasive weeds and animals, clear up pollution, and remove redundant dams, weirs, landings and other man-made structures to enable wildlife to thrive in water catchments.

An additional £18m will be provided this year to continue providing help to farmers to put in measures such as buffer strips and fences to protect water courses, and take other action in order to prevent agricultural pollution.

Last year, the Environment Agency reported otters may have become extinct in Kent as no species were found in a survey of the county's waterways.

However, a spot-check last month by the Kent Mammal Group found there was an otter Holt and traces of spraint (dung) at one site on the River Medway in west Kent.

There have also been further reports of otters in the north Kent marshes, which the group suspects may have come across the Thames from Essex.

Peter Smith – chief executive of the Canterbury-based Wildwood Trust animal conservation charity – said the Government was partly to blame for the dwindling number of otters in the county.

"The best thing Defra can do is stop destroying otter homes by digging away the river banks and straightening the rivers for flood defences," he added.

"There used to be large otter populations all over Kent but their numbers dwindled, firstly through hunting, then pesticides getting into the water supply. One of the main problems today is the over-management of rivers, which aren't being allowed to run naturally any more."

EMERGENCY SERVICES

Finances dented by 999 crews

EXCLUSIVE

By Steve Knight

steve.knight@archant.co.uk

EMERGENCY vehicles have been involved in more than 2,100 accidents on Kent's roads in the last three years.

Figures released to KoS under the Freedom of Information Act show repairs to police cars, fire engines, ambulances and other vehicles cost taxpayers hundreds of thousands of pounds every year. Kent Police have spent £1.1 million in repairs and third-party injury claims since April, 2008.

Jo Bullock, of the Royal Society for the Prevention of Accidents, said: "There are ways of working and driving that are unique to emergency vehicles, so it's important emergency services manage the risk their employees create on the road.

"It's important accidents are properly investigated to find out how and why they occurred and measures taken to prevent them happening again – but not all accidents involving emergency vehicles are caused by them."

Of the 2,166 accidents in the last three years, about 55 per cent (1,194) involved Kent Police. The force recorded 396 collisions between April 1, 2010, and March 8, 2011, compared with 411 for the whole of 2009-10 and 387 for 2008-09.

Of the £1.1m paid out, £828,012 was spent on repairs to its own vehicles, with £220,510 on third-party repairs and £99,977 on third-party injury claims.

Assistant Chief Constable Andy Adams said: "All police drivers undertake training that follows national guidelines and complies with the recommendations of the Association of Chief Police Officers and the Independent Police Complaints Commission," he said.

"We examine every accident thoroughly and that may include a review of an officer's capability and performance.

"Where circumstances justify it, an officer's right to drive police vehicles may be removed.

"The vast majority of cases are classed as very minor damage but have to be reported."

Last month, an emergency driving course delivered by Kent Fire and Rescue Service (KFRS) received recognition from the Institute of Advanced Motorists, but crews have still been involved in 559 accidents in the last three years.

Total cost to the taxpayer was £224,386, although 165 of the accidents were minor and required no repairs. A KFRS official said they were pleased the number of accidents had reduced from 239 in 2009-10 to 163 in the last financial year up to February 28.

She added: "The majority of incidents occur at very low speed, while manoeuvring in confined spaces. Very few occur during emergency responses.

However, any incident is treated seriously and investigated. Staff receive regular refresher training and all drivers undergo regular licence checks and risk assessments."

South East Coast Ambulance Service revealed its vehicles have been involved in 413 accidents in Kent between April, 2008, and February, this year. In 2010 service responded to 175,609 emergency calls and recorded 132 accidents.

A spokesman said: "The number of collisions each year accounts for less than one per cent of responses.

"All frontline staff receive extensive training in how to drive under emergency conditions and any collision is thoroughly investigated."

DASH: Emergency vehicle crews receive special driving training

ROYAL WEDDING

Bandmaster's expert ear tuned in for big day

By Mathew Beech

mathew.beech@archant.co.uk

A RETIRED bandmaster who played at the wedding of Prince Charles and Lady Diana will be listening to this month's Royal Wedding with a keen ear.

Peter Kane, 60, who was bandmaster at the Duke of York's Royal Military School in Dover for more than 20 years, played as part of the trombone fanfare at the 1981 Royal Wedding. The former soldier, originally from Belfast but now living in Dover, was invited to play at the ceremony because he was a music student at Royal Military School of Music at Kneller Hall in London.

Mr Kane said: "I will be watching the Royal Wedding and will definitely compare it because that is what I have been trained to do.

"I will be listening to hear if it is as good as when we did it. We were just a small part of a big occasion but were all hoping that our part went as well as possible."

The trombonist was enrolled on a three-year bandmaster course at the Royal Military School of Music in 1981 when a group was invited to play at St Paul's Cathedral wedding on July 29.

Despite months of preparation, the musicians had just two full rehearsals before playing to a global audience of 750 million.

Mr Kane said: "Charles and Diana chose us at Kneller Hall to play at their wedding, possibly because we covered all different grades and came from all the regiments in the Army.

"We had six months of intensive practice on the fanfare trombone and played a lot of music that had been written over the previous 50 years. We only had two songs on the day: I Was Glad and the National Anthem.

"We had one rehearsal with the choir at St Paul's and our second was the dress rehearsal with Charles and Diana.

"Charles had chosen I Was Glad and was listening to check it was how he remembered it."

The then 30-year-old trainee bandmaster never imagined he would end up performing at a royal wedding.

Mr Kane said: "I will always remember that. I never imagined that would be where my course would take me.

"We would often play for Royalty at events and functions, but this was the icing on the cake."

After his career in the military, Mr Kane moved to Dover to become bandmaster at the Duke of York's in 1990 until his retirement in 2009.

During his time at the school, the young musicians performed at many high profile events.

Mr Kane said: "I carried on the high standards I was set and the children rose to the occasion.

"They have performed at Lords at the England v New Zealand game and also at Twickenham for the annual Army and Navy match.

"It has given them a good foothold and something to build from."

Sure Start centres reprieved

KENT County Council has said all 97 of its Sure Start centres will remain open.

The centres offer a range of services including childcare, antenatal classes and baby clinics, with many facing closure elsewhere in the UK due to Government cuts.

Cabinet member Cllr Jenny Whittle said: "I know how important children's centres are and want them all to remain open. They had dedicated funding but this is now part of a wider grant, which has been reduced. Our priority is to maintain frontline services where they are needed most.

"Savings but been made by reducing back office costs and overheads where possible."

‘Communities going to pay for police cuts’

By Steve Knight
steve.knight@archant.co.uk

SHADOW Home Secretary Yvette Cooper says the Prime Minister is being "irresponsible" with his promises to tackle immigration.

The former Labour cabinet member paid a visit to Margate just hours after David Cameron said he planned to cut the number of people entering the UK from "hundreds of thousands to tens of thousands", but Ms Cooper told KoS she believes he has no idea how he is going to do it.

She said: "Cameron's not being straight with people on this, and there seems to be a very big gap between reality and rhetoric. He hasn't set any workable policies, and the Lib Dems are saying they don't think its part of their policy at all."

"He's grandstanding and I don't think that's responsible. It's not fair on the public who won't know what's going on.

Well I know what's going on.

A portrait of a woman with short blonde hair, smiling. She is wearing a blue jacket over a yellow top. The background is blurred, showing an indoor setting.

CRITICAL: Yvette Cooper

"Another thing that will particularly affect Kent is the planned cuts to the UK Border Agency by 5,000 people, that's going to make it much harder to keep track of and tackle illegal immigration."

Ms Cooper – the wife of shadow chancellor Ed Balls – was elected to Parliament in 1997 and was work and pensions secretary prior to Labour's defeat in the general election.

She was in Margate to speak with residents about the forthcoming cuts to police budgets, which Kent Police has warned will lead to the loss of 500 officers and 1,000 support staff.

"Chief constables have been put in impossible positions through the sheer size and scale of the cuts," said Ms Cooper. "The Government is taking unfair risks and it's communities like Margate that will pay.

"We've seen a 40 per cent drop in crime over the last 14 years or so but I think most people would say it's still too high and that we should be bringing it down further. Having more police on the streets does make a difference and the fact the Government doesn't seem to realise this shows how out of touch they are.

"You can't underestimate how awful it is to spend your life being afraid of crime."

REGENERATION

Turner can turn the tide for classic seaside resort

By Marijke Coxmarijke.cox@archant.co.uk

FROM East Enders to literary and creative heavyweights, Margate was once the place to be for hundreds of holiday-makers escaping the daily grind.

But a new breed of tourism in the form of the package holiday and tough competition from richer counterparts, including Brighton and Bournemouth, saw the town slip into decay, leaving it a shadow of its glory days of the 1950s and '60s.

Yet the faded resort is about to stage a comeback, according to tourism chiefs, heralding the start of a new era centred around the Turner Contemporary art gallery, which opens to its first visitors this weekend.

But the resurgence is about more than just the Turner, says Thanet council chief executive Richard Samuel.

With an impressive programme of work – called Creative Margate, costing £100,000 and led by the Margate Renewal Partnership – extensive improvements have been made to the town, including a revamped Marine Gardens and seafront, as well as additional business support which has helped attract 20 new ventures to the Old Town.

"Margate is changing and there's never been a better time to visit," said Mr Samuel.

"This is an exciting time, with the opening of a major new gallery set to draw thousands of people to the area, all eyes will be on our seaside town.

"The opening of the Turner Contemporary has been a great catalyst for regeneration and the town has started to flourish.

"Over the last 18 months we've seen almost 20 new businesses set up residence in Margate's Old Town. In the current economic climate that speaks for itself.

"I hope this weekend will encourage those who haven't been to Margate for a while to rediscover what the original seaside resort has to offer and to see for themselves how much the town has started to change."

The Old Town has undergone an extensive makeover in the last two years, with retro and niché boutiques, galleries, cafés, bars and restaurants opening up for visitors and residents.

In anticipation of the opening of the Turner Contemporary, the Creative Margate project focused on 10 priority areas to improve.

Eyesores such as the Arcadian and Fort Road Hotel were targeted as well as the railway station forecourt.

Business owners were helped to market and rejuvenate empty shop premises, and a wide range of small scale improvements were rolled out across town.

This included new signs, additional litter bins, an overhaul of seafront shelters and putting up bunting and banners. Hoardings by Arlington House boasting bright artwork have also been unveiled.

Mr Samuel said: "Getting Margate ready for the opening of the Turner Contemporary has been a top priority.

"With the gallery set to be a top destination for people far and wide, the town really needed to be ready to accommodate a dramatic increase in visitors.

"All the agencies involved have worked so hard getting us to this point.

"Whether it's the increased cleansing work, the programme of support to local businesses, the repairing and repainting of the walkway to the station or the installation of new bins and signs in the town, it's been a really great effort all round.

"I can't wait to see thousands of people enjoying their trip to the original seaside resort."

The Turner opening event on Saturday is expected to attract a record-breaking number of visitors to the town.

A programme of free events is being held, including a daredevil stunt show at the Dreamland Heritage site on Sunday, April 24; an Easter beer festival at the Winter Gardens on Friday and Saturday, April 22-23; and a golden Easter egg hunt at Hartsdown on Sunday, April 24.

The first 10 days of the gallery opening will also feature an array of free family exhibitions, live music, and performances as part of Turner Contemporary's You Are Here spectacular.

Margate Renewal Partnership director Derek Harding said: "This is going to be a huge boost for Margate and the whole area. We want to involve key local businesses to show them the benefits we believe Turner Contemporary will bring to Thanet."

HEALTH

Trust successful in improving physical health of mentally ill

By Jenna Pudelek

jenna.pudelek@archant.co.uk

MEASURES brought in to improve the physical health of patients with serious mental illness in Kent – whose life expectancy is reduced by up to 25 years – have begun to take effect.

Figures show that programmes to improve health and wellbeing among patients, who have conditions including schizophrenia and bipolar disorder, have seen more than a third stop or reduce smoking, and more than a fifth reduce their alcohol intake.

More than half of those with serious mental illness have also increased their physical activity.

Kent and Medway NHS and Social Care Partnership Trust, which provides mental health services in the county, began work to address the physical health of people with severe mental illness as far back as 2006. The group was known to suffer from poor physical health, with the main cause of death cardiovascular disease. They are also more likely to suffer from type 2 diabetes.

Donna Eldridge, the trust's head of nursing, said: "There are a number of reasons. People with serious mental illness can be difficult to engage in services and may not want to go to their GP. Then there is the area around the mental health drugs used to treat them, which come with side-effects. There is also a lack of physical activity."

RESULTS: The scheme has begun to show improvements in physical health

She said many of the lifestyle choices affecting their physical health were related to mental illness.

"Some of our clients are not engaged in the community or will not go out," she said. "They become withdrawn and tend to smoke and drink more."

Researchers at the University of East Anglia carried out a study on the physical health of people with serious mental illness based on the trust's work with service users. Among the 782 people taking part in the wellbeing programme, two-thirds were overweight or obese, and a disproportionate number suffered from diabetes, heart disease, high blood pressure and high cholesterol.

During the research, carried out in 2008, they found the patients did not do enough exercise, had a poor diet, smoked and drank alcohol excessively. This combined to reduce their life expectancy by 25 years.

But since the study was carried out, Mrs Eldridge said things have improved

Although she admitted it has proved hard to keep patients engaged with the Healthy Choices programme. She said participation was voluntary and more than the 782 patients involved in the research were now taking part.

Professor Richard Gray of UEA's School of Nursing and Midwifery, who led the report, found that mental health nurses did not tend to be skilled at managing the physical health of patients and often do not lead a healthy lifestyle themselves.

Mrs Eldridge said: "I wouldn't say they weren't doing enough. It's very difficult. Other kinds of things came in, such as cognitive behavioural therapy, sometimes the emphasis just shifted."

Cyclist harnesses force

By Steve Knight

steve.knight@archant.co.uk

WHEN a powerful tornado ripped through the tiny American town of Little Rock, Iowa, it left a trail of devastation in its wake.

Houses were demolished, pig farms flattened and electricity pylons uprooted by last June's twister, which reached Force 4 on the Enhanced Fujita Scale of intensity.

But despite hitting wind speeds of up to 200mph, the tornado failed to shake the resolve of a Canterbury filmmaker who was in the middle of a round-the-world charity bike ride.

Having now returned to the less hazardous surroundings of the Garden of England, 24-year-old Leon McCarron admitted he had made a lucky escape.

"Getting caught up in that tornado was obviously one of the more memorable moments of my journey," he said.

"I could see it approaching the town where I had been camping, and I had to quickly pack my tent away before some kindly people took me into their storm bunker.

"We watched it destroy their whole town – including the spot where my tent would have been – and I felt very lucky to be alive the next day.

"It was obviously pretty terrible for the people who lived there though.

"I spent the day after trying to help them clear up the damage, but some houses were completely flattened and trees had been scattered hundreds of miles across the countryside.

"It was very lucky that no-one was injured or killed."

Despite his concern for the people of Little Rock, Leon admitted the tornado had provided him with some excellent footage for a documentary he is making about the epic bike ride.

Departing from New York City on April 10 last year, the first 6,000 miles saw the former University of Kent student travel across North America to Vancouver and down the west coast to Mexico.

A 2,000-mile journey across both islands of New Zealand would be followed by 2,500 miles along the east coast of Australia and then a flight to Bangkok.

The final stretch of his amazing journey, which ended at London's St Paul's Cathedral on March 5, also covered destinations including Cambodia, Laos, Vietnam, China and Paris.

"I just wanted to have a good old-fashioned adventure," said Leon.

"Also the jobs market is pretty saturated at the moment, so following my graduation in 2008 I thought I would take the initiative and set myself apart from everyone else."

"I'd like to turn the footage I captured into a feature-length documentary or even something for TV. I've decided to write a book about it as well, so it's all pretty exciting."

Leon has so far raised about £3,500 for children's charity Unicef.

He is already thinking of new ways to feed his appetite for adventure, but admits he will be hard-pressed to top some of his recent experiences.

Leon said: "My two favourite places were New Zealand and Cambodia.

"New Zealand has lots of beautiful scenery and reminded me of parts of the Kent countryside where I did my practice rides, and the people there are so lovely and welcoming."

"Cambodia was a different culture to anything I've ever experienced before."

"I spent Christmas Day there and watched the sun come up on my own, it was so peaceful and beautiful."

EXHIBITION

Photographer zooms in on our coastline

A KAYAKER has combined his passion for the sea with his love of photography to create a unique exhibition showcasing the Kent coastline.

Mat Mackenzie, from Folkestone, has exploited the opportunities of capturing images from a sea kayak, which enables him to get up close and personal with wildlife and take pictures of the county's coast while out on the water.

He is showcasing a series of his favourite images as part of an exhibition called A Selective Retrospective, which runs until May 3.

"It draws inspiration from my connection with the sea and rural coastline and includes stunning landscapes and seascapes, as well as some more abstract images," he said.

"Central to my philosophy is through stillness and quiet reflection we can all reconnect more deeply with the beauty of our environment to achieve a more peaceful way of being."

The free exhibition is at Folkestone's Chimaera Gallery in Tontine Street.

Water sports enthusiast Mr Mackenzie said his exhibition will comprise of landscape, nature and macro photography, or close-up shots.

"Each picture will be accompanied by a description and a little about why I chose it," he said. "Images from both the Folkestone area and further afield have been selected."

Mr Mackenzie has a background in IT and runs technology and photography website.

For more information call Chimaera on 01303 211621, or visit www.matmackenzie.co.uk.

Proud mother explains how niece managed to give birth to her cousin

By Chris Murphy

editorial@archant.co.uk

A NEW mother aged 42 has spoken of the moment she asked her long-lost niece to carry her baby using 'home insemination'.

The result was a gorgeous baby daughter.

Sandra Barlow, who lives near Maidstone with her husband Chris, 50, said her fallopian tubes had fused, making it impossible for her to have her own baby.

In desperation, she turned to Emma Vaughan, 29, to carry baby Maia and when Emma said yes, she effectively gave birth to her own cousin. Emma provided her eggs, and her uncle Chris supplied the sperm, which was inserted at home. It was the happy conclusion of a 15-year nightmare for Sandra, who now has a 15-month-old daughter.

The couple had tried conventional IVF treatment, but after spending around £40,000 on seven attempts over five years, it seemed Sandra was destined to remain childless. There were two miscarriages.

They needed help and remembered Emma, the daughter of Sandra's brother Jim. The women had lost touch years ago when Emma's parents split up. Some 11 years later when Jim died, they were reunited at his funeral.

After discussing her brainwave of using Emma as a surrogate with Chris, Sandra plucked up the courage to ask and was delighted when Emma, who already had several children of her own, jumped at the chance.

At her home, Sandra, a catering company manager, said: "Maia is here now and is quite happy. It all went as it should have done I would guess. It was a weird experience but well worth it in the end."

They took advice from a surrogate agency on how to proceed and signed a surrogacy agreement, even though it is not recognised by law. Emma moved in with Sandra and the new 'mum' applied for a parental order when Maia was born. But it took many attempts before Emma fell pregnant in June, 2009.

Sandra said: "It took 17 goes at the artificial insemination, you do one every month. They are home inseminations – we do them ourselves. It's not the same as IVF. Without being crude, somebody provides a sample and it's placed in somebody else. They didn't have sex – it was just a transfer of matter shall we say."

"This is one of the reasons Emma moved in – she had to be available there and then."

Sandra said Maia has her father's looks and Emma's eyes, and she is prepared to tell her daughter how she started her life when she's older.

900 threatened drugs giant staff handed 'at risk' notices

By Marijke Cox

marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

SANDWICH MP Laura Sandys has urged Pfizer to improve support for contractors working at the stricken site after hundreds of employees were issued with 'at risk' notices.

The backbencher, who is part of a taskforce set up to lessen the economic impact of Pfizer's decision to leave Kent, said she remained concerned about their futures, despite welcoming the drugs giant's decision to grant an additional three months' redundancy pay to staff employed by the company.

Her comments came as Pfizer announced some 900 workers had been handed their 'at risk' notices in what could be the first wave of redundancies at the site.

A spokeswoman for the company stressed that any redundancy notices would not be served until after the 90-day consultation period which started in February and ends on May 2.

She was unable to comment on how many of those in the first wave would lose their jobs.

SHUT-DOWN: Staff facing redundancy

tion) can colleagues who have been notified they are 'at risk' begin to receive notice of redundancy and this will occur at different times according to the needs and priorities of each area of the business," she said.

In February, bosses at Pfizer – which has been based at Sandwich for 53 years – announced the company would be leaving the site, leaving 2,400 jobs at risk – rising to 5,000 when including contractors at the site.

A taskforce was set up by the Government, chaired by leader of Kent County Council Cllr Paul Carter, and involving Thanet South MP Laura Sandys and Thanet North MP Roger Gale.

A report was submitted last month outlining proposals to lessen the impact of Pfizer's departure on the local economy, but last Friday the company announced the beginning of the process of redundancy for the first wave of staff.

Ms Sandys was disappointed at the number of 'at risk' notices issued.

"Although we knew that staff would eventually be made redundant, the taskforce had pushed for more time to allow the east Kent community to re-adjust," she said.

The Pfizer spokeswoman stressed the company was doing all it could to help employees and was implementing a redundancy enhancement equivalent to three months' pay.

"The company is granting an enhancement to colleagues who will exit the Sandwich site in recognition of the specific situation they are in," she said.

"This will provide increased financial flexibility and a longer period of financial certainty, thus enabling people to take the time to explore options locally and to have greater financial ability to retrain and acquire new skills."

"Colleagues will receive an additional payment equivalent to three months' base salary [plus shift allowance] as part of their redundancy."

£50m to build state-of-the-art academy

mathew.beech@archant.co.uk

STUDENTS and staff at the Isle of Sheppey Academy are celebrating securing more than £50m towards two state-of-the-art buildings.

The academy's sponsors, Dulwich College and the Diocese of Canterbury, along with Kent County Council have secured government approval for £54m, which will see two buildings developed on the east and west of the island.

It will mean facilities at the academy, which specialises in business, enterprise and sport, will be among the best in the world.

They will include a media suite, drama and dance facilities, performance hall, sports hall and outdoor sporting facilities, as well as a vocational centre. Construction is due to start in May.

The academy's chairwoman of governors, Baroness Floella Benjamin, said: "This is fantastic news for the young people of Sheppey and will help us as we seek to transform education for generations to come."

The news comes alongside further funding which was secured by the Spires Academy near Canterbury. It has been granted £14m to spend on sports facilities and a central hub building.

Kent County Council leader Cllr Paul Carter, said: "I am delighted that Kent has secured £68m of government funding for these two academies.

"This is a real investment in the future of young people. You cannot underestimate the difference this will make to so many lives."

The Spires Academy is due to open in its new buildings in September, 2012 and Isle of Sheppey Academy in February, 2013.

Town halls get tough on late parking fines

By Chris Murphy

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

COUNCILS are using private bailiffs and debt collectors in an effort to reduce town halls' deficits.

So says civil liberty organisation, Big Brother Watch, which claimed Bromley used the practice most in Kent.

Using the Freedom of Information act, it has compiled a national list of the 320 councils that use bailiffs the most, and several Kent authorities make the chart.

In total, local councils in the UK have passed almost six million cases to debt collectors between 2007-10. The money outstanding is usually council tax and parking fines.

Edinburgh, Glasgow and Birmingham are the top three with around a quarter of a million cases each.

But also making the list are Bromley at 29 with almost 47,000 cases; Thanet at 50 with more than 27,000; Bexley at 58 with almost 23,000; Gravesend at 87 with nearly 16,500; Canterbury at 102 on over 13,500; Dartford at 112 with 10,700; Maidstone at 142 on almost 9,000; Dover at 153 with 8,000; Sevenoaks at 171 with 7,000; Tonbridge and Malling at 177 with 6,500; and Ashford at 204 with 5,300.

The group said Medway did not respond, and neither did Shepway or Tunbridge Wells.

Big Brother director Daniel Hamilton said:

"Sending in bailiffs should always be the last resort. The fact local councils have passed more than six million cases to bailiffs for matters as trivial as the late payment of council taxes and parking fines is truly shocking."

Mr Hamilton added that 17 million debt recovery cases were processed last year.

Clr Neil Reddin of Bromley Council said: "We always try and work with those who owe money to reach an agreement on how it can be repaid and the use of debt collectors and the courts are always a last resort.

"However, we have a reputation for managing our resources effectively. We take the responsibility to residents and council tax payers to ensure we collect any outstanding money seriously."

Thanet Council chief executive, Richard Samuel, added: "For us, it's a last resort to try and recover money, either for payment of bills like council tax or unpaid parking fines. If we didn't, there's every chance our collection rate would be lower and would impact on every taxpayer."

"As for Thanet using bailiffs more than other areas, there's a simple answer to that. We're a deprived area, which brings its own problems. If people can't pay, we'll work with them, but sadly, we have a minority of who won't pay."

A Maidstone Council spokesman said: "We always want to talk to residents and agree a payment plan. Only when all else fails do we resort to bailiffs."

DISASTER MEMORIAL

Firefighters to attend 1929 disaster memorial

By Chris Murphy

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

AN INTERVENTION by KoS has helped ensure Kent Fire and Rescue Service will be represented at a memorial event to mark the deaths more than 80 years ago of 15 people, including children and fire officers.

A relative of a victim of the 1929 Gillingham Park fire disaster, who has campaigned to have the deaths remembered in a permanent memorial, was concerned the fire service was set to miss the unveiling ceremony.

A year ago Canadian Lori Oschefski asked KoS to help promote her idea for a memorial. Then she became worried

KFRS was not going to be represented at the ceremony, so she again asked KoS for help.

She said: "I am so excited the time is almost here for the July 10 unveiling of the memorial.

"Family are expected to attend from Canada, United States and across England."

But despite a flurry of phone calls and emails, she was concerned the fire service was ignoring her appeals to attend.

From her home in Canada, she told KoS: "After several emails, I was left waiting for confirmation from the fire service, who I feel very strongly should be in attendance.

"All three of the firemen who died that day will be represented by family members. They also deserve to be acknowledged by their colleagues.

"They were in the park that day doing what community minded public servants should be doing more of, even today: collecting funds for a hospital."

But after KoS got in touch with the service, officials swung in to action. Within days, Lori's co-ordinator in Kent Elaine Nutton, a relative of two victims, received an email from Gary Stanford, the North Kent Group station manager, who wrote: "I can confirm a fire-fighting crew will be available to take part in the parade and attend the unveiling.

"Perhaps we could meet up at nearer to the time to run through the plan and confirm what you'd like from us."

Lori said: "I can't thank KoS

DISASTER: Funeral of firefighter killed in the Gillingham Park fire enough. The paper got the ball rolling and used its influence to get the Kent Fire Service respond to our invite."

The Gillingham Park fire disaster, also known as the Fireman's Wedding Disaster, happened on July 11, 1929, and was a public training exercise during the fete.

A 'happy couple' along with local children went in to a makeshift 'house' which was set alight in a controlled manner, and everyone inside was supposed to be rescued by the firemen. But the blaze got out of control killing 15 people.

While studying her family tree, Lori discovered she was related to a victim, and was angry there was no memorial in memory of the dead.

The memorial in Gillingham Park will be unveiled on July 10, the eve of the tragedy's 82nd anniversary. The day will start with a service at Woodlands Cemetery at 10am.

Gillingham library will put on a display of articles and items related to the tragedy for a month before the unveiling.

SOCIAL CARE

Social worker disciplined for dishonesty

By Steve Knight

steve.knight@archant.co.uk

A DISHONEST children's social worker has been disciplined by the industry regulator for failing to disclose concerns raised about his suitability for the profession.

Medway Council held a capability review into Godwin Jesuorobo's poor performance in August, 2007, which he did not tell future employers about when applying for new positions.

The review came after allegations that Mr Jesuorobo had failed to spot several instances of sexual abuse, rape and domestic violence affecting youngsters in his care.

However, it could not be proved during a hearing of the General Social Care Council (GSCC) conduct committee that he had failed to carry out comprehensive risk assessments on the 10 children in question, nor that his conduct had placed them at risk of harm.

The conduct committee concluded: "While it is accepted that there were considerable failings in the standard of the registrant's written work, particularly in respect of case analysis, it was not satisfied that there was sufficient evidence for these failings to substantiate the allegations."

Mr Jesuorobo, who has more than 18 years' experience in the social work profession, was a member of Medway Council's child protection team between November, 2005, and September, 2007.

He resigned from the authority after missing the final meeting of his capability review through ill health.

Mr Jesuorobo went on to work for Barking and Dagenham Council but was sacked in May, 2009, when it was discovered he had lied on his application form about his previous employment in Medway.

The GSCC launched its investigation shortly after the dismissal, and officials concluded that the social worker had committed misconduct by way of his "misleading" and "dishonest" actions.

The committee ruled that Mr Jesuorobo should have an "admonishment" placed against his name on the social work register for the next four years.

It concluded: "The committee was satisfied that an admonishment would suitably mark the registrant's behaviour as unacceptable and of the kind which must not happen again.

"The committee noted that the non-disclosure and misrepresentations were not isolated incidents but recognised there was a low risk of recurrence.

"Therefore admonishment provided adequate public protection and satisfied the public interest as far as the registrant's suitability was concerned."

TRAGEDY: Clare Bernal was murdered by stalker Michael Pech

STALKING

Victim's mum determined to

by Steve Knight

steve.knight@archant.co.uk

ON SEPTEMBER 13, 2005, Michael Pech walked into a London department store and shot dead a young woman he had spent weeks stalking.

Her name was Clare Bernal, a pretty 22-year-old from Groombridge near Tunbridge Wells, who had earlier reported Pech for harassment after he refused to accept their brief relationship was over.

Few could have predicted at the time that the killer – who turned his gun on himself after the attack in Harvey Nichols, Knightsbridge – would follow through on the countless threats made in text messages and telephone calls.

But Clare's mother Tricia, who has since helped set up a helpline for victims of stalking, is determined to ensure no other families are made to suffer like the Bernal's have.

"The publicity about Clare's death was very hard to deal with in the beginning," she said. "But I was driven from the word go because I felt that if I didn't speak out about what had happened then I would be letting Clare down.

"I couldn't cry at first. Last year was the first year my tears flowed freely. We were very close and Clare was becoming as much my best friend as she was my daughter, but that's all been taken away. It's the same for her father and brothers.

"You learn to cope with it but there are times when I think I can't bear the pain, while there are also times when I feel like I have to live my life for two."

In 2008 Mrs Bernal helped to establish Protection Against Stalking, which aims to create a "consistent, professional and effective response" to victims of stalking and harassment.

HARASSMENT: Excessive texting can be a form of stalking tims fear they will not be taken seriously – a view Mrs Bernal agrees with.

"With some people it might start with them receiving a box of chocolates or finding a bunch of flowers left on their car windscreens," she said. "But then you think how can you go to the police station and tell them something like that? It makes you feel embarrassed.

"But with Clare it was full-on stalking for three weeks. He would text her up to 50 times a day and phone her at every opportunity, and if she went for a cup of coffee somewhere she would often find him standing opposite her.

"After three weeks it became more sinister, and he started threatening to kill her. He was absolutely obsessed and would tell her they were going to spend their lives together whether she liked it or not.

"Clare was very frightened, but she also started to feel responsible. She felt maybe she had given him the wrong impression. She also felt stupid for dating someone like that."

Pech, 30, was charged with harassment in April, 2005, and pleaded guilty four months later. But he never made his sentencing hearing on September 21, having killed himself and Miss Bernal eight days earlier.

"While being stalked, Clare couldn't sleep, she couldn't concentrate and her whole world was caving in," said her mother.

"But after Pech was arrested and the stalking stopped, she began to get her life back. She died at her most positive, vibrant and beautiful."

"When a tragedy like this happens, you've got two choices. You can either give up or you can make sure the person you lost has not died in vain."

National stalking awareness week is supported by Protection Against Stalking, the Suzy Lamplugh Trust and the Network for Surviving Stalking.

Launching the campaign on Monday, the charities called for stalking laws to be toughened up to prevent murders while also proposing a stalkers' register and better training for police to identify victims.

Last month a group of MPs called for cyber-stalking to be made a criminal offence as part of an overhaul of the law, which Mrs Bernal has welcomed.

She said: "There needs to be better education in schools because cyber-stalking is a massive problem. It's shocking how much personal information is out there in the public domain, and how easy it is to stalk.

"Nobody should find themselves in a situation where they are too afraid to answer their mobile phone or open their front door. That's why we need to help people understand the possible consequences of putting too much information on websites like Facebook."

Offer your child a complete bilingual education in france

Just a stone's throw from England, Boulogne-sur-Mer is a typical French town that is renowned for a warm welcome!

Charles Dickens called Boulogne his 'favorite French watering place'; her beautiful Notre Dame Cathedral is reminiscent of St Paul's, her melted cheese and ham speciality is a 'rarebit' to be reckoned with, add a hint of 'Pudding de Noël', 'moules frites' and 'crème caramel' and you have the delectable evidence of a long lasting love affair between Boulogne and England.

Providing a supportive environment

We recognise that for parents, sending a child to study abroad is a major emotional investment. We aim to ensure the personal development and well-being of each pupil within our care. Students are embarking on a new experience, far from home. The boarding school is a place of work but also a place for exchange and cohesion. Their individual abilities and differences naturally bring the group together; they help each other, take time to listen to one another and share experiences.

Accommodation

The boarding school is new and purpose built, it offers facilities to accommodate 40 children in the International Section. The building comprises bedrooms with en suite bathrooms... Three children share a room and dispose of a single bed with desk and chair. There are facilities for special needs, particularly for those physically challenged. The small number of pupils means that we can give them the individual attention they will need, particularly in the first weeks away from home. Two teacher assistants, one male and one female, are on hand day and night in the boarding school to help with homework and offer moral assistance and help to ensure their well-being.

One can only become truly bilingual when one shares both the language and the culture of a country

Generally a bilingual education in France is only available in private schools but the proximity of Boulogne to England and our shared history have encouraged the County Council for the Pas-de-Calais to develop an international section at the centrally situated Collège Daunou. English speaking children can now learn to speak and write French alongside French children of their own age in a truly French environment.

Collège Daunou aims to follow the path of the much acclaimed French education system

France offers state-run and private schools at all levels and the educational standards are high. The rigorous curriculum is dictated by the Ministry of Education and is virtually the same across the country and in French overseas territories. The French educational philosophy emphasizes: the authority of the Teacher; individual competition including an absolute grading system; stress is on analytical thought and students are frequently expected to learn by heart. Academic expectations are high. Sports are encouraged in and out of school, the variety of after school sports is particularly wide.

Real France real close

Over 200 crossings a day between Calais and Dover. Eurotunnel 35 minutes. Eurostar 55 minutes (from London). P+O and Seafarce 90 minutes from Dover. Boulogne is just a 30 minute drive from Calais via the A16 toll free motorway.

OPINION

AV would be a disaster for UK

KCC Tory councillor Julie Rook argues the alternative vote system would be expensive, bad for democracy and too complicated for voters

OUR current system of first past the post is simple to understand, fair and superior to the alternative vote because it tends to create strong, accountable governments and means coalitions are uncommon, with no horse-trading by politicians behind the scenes.

The winner of an election should always be the candidate who comes first. With AV, instead of the voters choosing the Government, politicians would hold power and that is not right. The people must decide who runs our country.

We have been here before. According to Hansard records, a bill to change the electoral system to AV was passed in the Commons in 1931 by 278 to 228 votes, but thankfully rejected later in the Lords.

And more recently, the independent commission, chaired by senior Lib Dem Roy Jenkins in 1988 concluded AV was even less proportional than our existing system and warned it was 'disturbingly unpredictable'.

There has also been some research into how the last six general elections might have looked had the 'alternative vote' system been in place.

It is believed the overall outcome of the contests would not have changed, so why bother?

Except of course Lib Dems would have gained more seats. So now we know why Nick Clegg is cheerleading AV with no consideration for the cost to the taxpayer.

Also more legitimacy would be given to the BNP and according to the British election study, the Greens would not have won any additional seats.

Is it right for councils to spend £26 million telling people how the complicated system works, or £130m on vote-counting machines?

With families facing tough times should we expect them to foot the bill of a quarter of a billion pounds bringing in a new voting system when we should be reducing the country's trillion pound deficit or spending it on schools or hospitals instead?

AV is also too complicated. The explanation of AV in the Electoral Commissions booklet takes 351 words while first past the post, just 59 words.

I have attended general election counts and seen how many fellow citizens struggle with the concept of putting a single cross in the box.

As well as the cross, I have seen the ticks, lines and circles, some of which are placed next to the candidate's name or in the margin of the voting form.

I have even seen how some voters write the name of the candidate on the ballot paper. I shudder to think how such voters would cope with AV.

I also know how time consuming election counts are. If we had AV, it could take days to figure out who has won.

AV won't mean the end of broken politics, get rid of safe seats, and it won't increase turnout

AV would be a disaster. It would mean candidates who finish third winning elections, and an end to the principle of one person one vote. It would mean supporters of extreme parties would have their vote counted more.

AV wouldn't mean the end of broken politics. It won't increase turnout, get rid of safe seats or negative campaigning and it won't make MPs more accountable.

There is also a real worry this campaign has yet to get the pulse racing amongst the general public.

But I am sure once people realise AV allows candidates who come third to end up winning, boosts the influence of those backing the BNP and other extremist parties and is only used in Australia, Fiji and Papua New Guinea, they will back the No campaign. They will understand there is no justification for this change.

Thanet cannot afford to waste Turner prize

THE opening of Margate's Turner Contemporary gallery this weekend has been heralded as the beginning of a bright new future for the local area.

But while the £17m development will attract thousands of visitors to east Kent, it would be foolish to assume it is the only answer to the region's woes.

The seaside town has been a shadow of its former self for years now, and an art gallery alone will not restore the glory days of the 1950s and '60s.

It's now up to everyone else to capitalise on the opportunity this exciting new gallery has created for Thanet.

Thanks to runners for your marathon effort

CONGRATULATIONS in advance to everyone taking part in the London Marathon, no matter where you finish.

Twenty-six miles is a long distance in anyone's book, so those who attempt to tackle it deserve high praise indeed.

Many of Kent's participants have also pledged to raise money for charity, so here's hoping for a successful day.

Enough cash to pay for war

IT'S strange, Cameron and his cronies couldn't wait to get into government, since then they haven't stopped whinging on about the terrible situation they have inherited from the previous administration.

They conveniently forgot to mention how bad it is in other countries, such as Greece, Spain, Portugal. Just to mention a few. The Labour Party had nothing to do with their demise, but all this Coalition keeps on about is what Labour did or didn't do whilst in power. We all know (except them) it was a worldwide recession, not just a British one.

Gordon Brown warned the public about the threat to the winter fuel payment, he was called a liar by Cameron.

He also warned about the NHS, also now proved to be correct. How many broken promises are we going to have to put up with before we kick these liars out? The Coalition says we are in deep debt. Cameron shoots off to Pakistan, offers them six-a-and-half million quid and to say sorry for saying they were looking both ways regarding terrorists, trying to appear what a great guy I am, look how much money I am giving your country. Our money. Money that should be spent in our country.

This mob that's in power now already donates £1.5 billion of our money in overseas aid. Charity should begin at home. A great many people are losing their jobs because of the way this government is making swingeing cuts, and yet they can give all this money away.

We are poking our noses in Libya, which is costing us millions, an endless battle in Afghanistan and soon, we may be embroiled in other Arab states. There is no shortage of money where a war is concerned.

Local shops under threat

KENT Green Party believes the quality of our lives depends a great deal on the quality of our local services and the diversity of our local economies.

Increasing numbers of out-of-town shopping centres have led to the decline of local shops and businesses, and there is no shortage of public outrage on this subject.

As these businesses shrink in the new era of expensive fuel prices, we need to rebuild local public sector employment to help keep the private sector operating.

In our 2010 General Election Manifesto, we vowed we would try to amend planning laws to support appropriate small businesses and ensure all large retail developments included spaces for small local businesses, introduce a network of local community banks, and reduce corporation tax for small firms to 20 per cent.

The New Economics Foundation in a report says 41 per cent of towns in the UK are now 'clone towns' with more than 50 per cent of their shops part of national chains.

Local traders throughout Kent are correct that new supermarkets are unnecessary and do great damage to many small independent businesses which add to their area's character and diversity. Local stores provide a wider social and economic role and one that is central to a sustainable neighbourhood.

Over 50 per cent of the turnover of independent retailers goes back into the local community.

AV is a daft way to vote

I AM far from happy about our electoral system but the proposed Alternative Vote system is a nonsense, this is a system where you can get everyone's last choice voted in a daft system.

We have two choices – keep the first-past-the-post system where the where there is one man one vote but make it compulsory to vote, with a 'not one of the above' option.

The reason we have a low voting turnout is because most people are too lazy to get to the polling station. Another way is half of the MPs would be voted in on first past the post with the constituencies being doubled in size and the candidate not allowed to show the name of the party on any electoral material, this would stop the major parties bringing in party stooges, the candidate would have to work hard to get his name about.

This will keep the link between the MP and the electorate and the other half on how you vote for the relevant political party, ie, if one party gets 50 per cent of the vote they 50 per cent of the MPs and so on.

This service needs saving

I AM disgusted at how a local children's information project is on the verge of closing down due to lack of funding.

The B48s – which can be found in Town Walk, Folkestone – has been helping and supporting families for the last 15 years. It has helped thousands of families by:

Offering information on everything ranging from immunisations, healthy living, benefits and entitlements, education, children's centres, baby and toddler groups, after-school activities, what's-on-where as well as sensitive subjects such as domestic abuse.

It is providing a valued, friendly environment for feeding your child.

In the past we enjoyed regular parent and child sessions such as baby massage, messy play and toddler groups.

In recent years it's also been providing free online computer courses which were avidly taken up by OAPs. However, the courses were also helping mums who were looking for a way back into work.

Most importantly B48s offered mums and dads a comfortable place to take a break. There is always a cup of tea and a friendly face if you needed a chat and you could pop in just to let your kids play for an hour.

It is a charity and without funding, it cannot continue and now it seems it will have to close.

Kevin, the manager of B48s, has been the heart and soul of this brilliant charity for 10 years. He has supported thousands of families over the years.

He is set to lose his job and become unemployed. After all those years his put into his local community.

I am furious. I know many, many parents are. One mum called Jess has been using B48s for a few years was so hurt they might have to close that she raised about £1,000 for them, but unfortunately it wasn't enough.

In a time when we are all struggling in the recession, having a place that is not only welcoming – but that is free, is unbelievably valuable.

Many people thought the Coalition would bring a positive change to England, but all it's doing is shattering the communities by withdrawing the centres and the charities and the people who help support us.

I know some of the local government run children's centres are suffering from budget 'cuts' but these are just minor cuts – they'll still be open and providing their services, even at a reduced service.

B48s will be closed and gone for ever. It's a one-of-a-kind charity.

Something must be able to be done to help it.

Please help us to raise awareness of this upsetting loss in our community.

Bankruptcy isn't the easy way out

QI set up in business on my own two years ago. I rent premises but had to pay a lump sum for the lease, and I needed to buy a van, which I did on credit. Due to the lack of work in the current climate, I am now in arrears on payments for the van and with the rent, and I have been borrowing on credit cards to make ends meet. The bottom line is that I owe about £20,000 in all. If I go bankrupt, what are the practical results? Is the whole £20,000 written off? I know the old rule about being allowed to keep my clothes and the tools of my trade, but is it more complicated than that?

ABankruptcy lasts for one year, but the fallout takes far longer to settle. During the one year, you may be forced to hand over any savings and sell assets such as a car for the benefit of your creditors, and you cannot borrow more than a small amount from anyone without revealing that you are bankrupt. Your credit cards will be cancelled, and your bank will probably change the type of account you have. Your bankruptcy will show up on your credit agency file for six years, which may tip the balance against you if you apply for credit or a mortgage in that time, even after you are discharged from bankruptcy. You might think that the worst is over after a year, but in fact the legal restrictions last for three years and they have recently become tougher. Assuming you continue to have some income over and above basic household and living expenses, then much of this will go to your creditors. You will be allowed to keep just £10 a month to spend as you wish – down from £50 a month under earlier guidance that applied until a few months ago. And if you work harder and earn more, the extra cash will also go to your creditors. Bankruptcy should be a last resort, not a first option. Talk to Citizens Advice, a debt counsellor or a solicitor, and consider an individual voluntary arrangement (IVA). This is a stop short of bankruptcy and, if your creditors agree, will let you pay a percentage of your debts instead of the full amount. It could still be painful, but it leaves you with more control of your own life.

QMy wife and I are in our late 60s. Looking ahead, if one of us needs to go into care, will the council sell our house to pay the fees? How much are we allowed to have in savings before we lose council help with care costs? Could we give our house to our children, to avoid selling it?

AThe picture differs slightly around Britain. In England, if you have £23,000, you are expected to pay all your own care fees, while in Wales the figure is £22,000. These figures include savings, investments and the value of your home.

TONY HETHERINGTON
MONEY CLINIC

But your home will be ignored if one of you still lives in it after the other goes into residential care. You can gift your home to your children, but there can be tax disadvantages. If you die within seven years, its value still counts towards inheritance tax. And, unless your children live in the house, it will not be exempt from capital gains tax. A better option might be a family trust. Done properly, this would remove the house from care fees calculations, but keep the gains tax exemption. Setting up a trust is a major decision though, and you should see a solicitor.

QWe answered a magazine advertisement that offered to draft our wills for £59, but the salesman then tried to add storage fees. We backed off, but my husband says we should go ahead with the basic will service as it seems cheap.

ABe very careful. Anybody can set up as a will writer, with no experience or qualifications. And will writers need no insurance, so any defect in your will could cost your estate a lot of money to put right. The Law Society is so concerned at the problem of defective wills that it wants the government to ban unqualified will writers. I know the Law Society has an axe to grind, as it wants all wills to be drafted by solicitors, who are its members – but this really is the safest choice! The society's website – www.lawsociety.org.uk – lists solicitors who specialise in various areas of law, including wills.

QI have about £130,000 to invest for the best monthly income. I would not put all my eggs in one basket, so what is the maximum covered by the official compensation scheme?

AThe Financial Services Compensation Scheme covers up to £85,000 in cash deposit accounts. Santander (0800 389 9875) offers a 4.01pc yield on its monthly income three-year fixed-rate savings bond. You could combine this with a Nationwide My Save Online Plus account (www.nationwide.co.uk), paying 3.05pc, as this offers easy access and a variable rate in case rates rise.

SWITCH OVER: While the Co-Op reports an increase in customers switching to its service, many more of us seem happy to stay put

Co-op is a winner in the big switch

By Adam Aiken
MyMoney24 editor

THERE are signs that the number of people switching banks is on the rise, with one provider reporting a huge increase in customers defecting to it.

Although the Co-operative Bank and its Smile offshoot have a small overall market share, a near-80pc leap in people switching to its current accounts last year could prove significant, given that the number of people moving between providers had previously been fairly stable.

Despite criticism by the Independent Commission on Banking (ICB) this week about the lack of competition within the sector, there have been several recent high-profile campaigns to encourage customers to switch. Santander and Halifax have been two high-street names offering cash incentives to current account customers.

But it is possible that the attractiveness of the Co-op has been as much down to its ethical stance and business practices as to the products themselves.

The bank said the past year had seen a number of events that had triggered this behaviour by customers, with peaks in the number of switchers apparently linked to events such as public distrust in financial institutions and unease with bankers' bonuses.

Co-op chief executive Neville Richardson said: "Our switching figures clearly show that consumers are increasingly being attracted to the bank. However, we believe more can be done to encourage greater competition and we welcome the call for a 'radically improved' system of switching accounts in the ICB interim report."

The news from the Co-op follows recent research that found the majority of people wanted to stay with their existing providers.

Stats produced by watchdog Consumer Focus suggested that three quarters of consumers have never considered switching current accounts, while a further 17pc (or more than eight million people) have thought about doing so but then stayed put.

This compares badly with other areas of personal finance – more people switch their domestic energy, insurance and telephone services than their current accounts.

Consumer Focus said the main reasons for people being reluctant to switch were the fear of costs when things went wrong, the hassle involved and the fear of any mistake resulting in a negative effect on their credit rating.

"For too many people, switching current accounts simply does not enter their mind, even if their bank has let them down," said Sarah Brooks, head of financial services at Consumer Focus.

"Until more people are prepared to vote with their feet, there will not be enough pressure on banks to improve their performance. Complaints against banks are persistently at an unacceptably high level. We need to promote switching and make it less error-prone if we are to force the banks to raise their game."

Halifax card customers facing rate hikes

HALIFAX has announced plans to link the interest it charges on its credit cards to the Bank of England base rate – almost certainly meaning users will see their rates go up soon.

The lender said the move would make things more transparent, but with most observers expecting the Bank of England's monetary policy committee (MPC) to put the base rate up soon, Halifax customers will see their rates go up, too.

The change means that Halifax customers will have a single personal rate, as opposed to the current system which can see different rates for purchases and cash withdrawals.

Halifax said the changes would mean most customers would pay either less interest, the same amount as they currently do, or less than 2p extra for every £1,000 they borrowed. However, that is likely to change when the MPC starts to increase the base rate.

Existing customers will receive letters about the change soon. New and Clarity card customers will be notified separately and moved on to the new structure next year.

Car insurance costs are spiralling out of control

RECORD-BREAKING hikes in car insurance premiums have seen costs shoot up by more than 40pc in a year.

The eye-watering increase is the largest-ever annual rise according to the AA.

The organisation's British Insurance Premium Index has shown that both home and car insurance premiums have increased significantly, but it is the car insurance rise which is by far the most notable.

The index shows that car premiums rose 5.9pc over the first quarter and by a record 40.1pc over the year to the end of March.

Home premium increases were less than expected at 13.6pc for buildings and 11.9pc for contents.

The car insurance rises show little sign of abating, according to the AA.

kers and schemes against a basket of risks that is typical of the UK driving population.

Simon Douglas, director of AA Insurance, said: "The record rises in fuel costs coupled with spiralling car insurance premiums is disappointing news and is making driving unaffordable for many, especially cash-strapped young drivers.

"This is leading to more people withholding information when taking out a policy or exaggerating personal injury claims to try to reduce their costs.

"But this simply piles on costs for insurers and results in yet higher premiums for honest motorists."

Drivers aged 17 to 22 have again taken the brunt of the increases, with a typical premium of £2,431 being paid, more than 64pc higher than a year ago.

The main drivers of premium inflation remain fraud and injury claims, added Mr Douglas.

"Although the number of collisions on Britain's roads is falling, the number of claims for whiplash injury is rising," he said.

"It's tempting to make such claims with the huge number of 'accident management' law firms using cold-call marketing techniques."

Unless action is taken to curb the rising cost of settling personal injury claims, motor insurance premiums will continue to rise, the Association of British Insurers (ABI) warned.

Nick Starling, the ABI's director of general insurance and health, said: "Enough is enough.

"Putting the brake on ambulance-chasing lawyers and claims management firms cannot come a moment too soon.

"Motorists have rightly had enough of paying for excessive legal costs, which add an extra 10pc to the cost of motor insurance."

"It cannot be right that for every £1 motor insurers pay out in compensation, an extra 87p is paid out in legal costs.

"What we now need is a ban of referral fees – where details of potential personal injury claimants are sold on to solicitors and claims management firms."

■ Meanwhile, Mr Douglas said he was surprised the increases in buildings and contents home insurance premiums were not greater given record claims over the recent winter.

"During December alone insurers dealt with claims amounting to around £900m for snow and ice damage and the AA's own experience saw a sharp rise in claims for burst pipes, ice damage to roofs and gutters and damage from melt water, compared with the previous winter.

"Given industry concern about the increasing severity and frequency of severe weather the premium increases we are seeing are quite modest, which is welcome news."

PICK OF THE WEEK

In association with the experts at Moneyfacts.co.uk, we highlight some of the best new products launched this week.

Savings: Leeds Building Society

The Fixed-Rate Postal Bond Issue 3, paying a rate of 2.75pc on maturity. Maturing on January 1, 2012, this postal-operated account has a minimum investment of £1,000 and allows further additions whilst the issue is open and unlimited penalty-free access. Savers must be aged 18 or over.

Why is it good? Sitting just below the market leaders for bonds under one year, this deal should prove popular with savers who wish to access funds at short notice without incurring a penalty, which is rare for a fixed-rate product.

Savings: Post Office

An increase of 0.35pc sees the Fixed-Rate Cash Isa Issue 5 rate rise to 3.95pc. Savers can invest a minimum of £500 and further additions are not permitted.

Early access is allowed on account closure, subject to 180 days' loss of interest. Transfers in are accepted. The account can be operated by savers aged 16 and over by post or telephone.

Why is it good? This fixed Isa review by the Post Office sees rates on all terms increasing, making them more competitive. The three-year term at 3.95pc is a top-five rate compared with similar products. Earlier closure is permitted subject to an interest penalty of up to 180 days' loss.

Mortgages: HSBC

HSBC has withdrawn and replaced selected variable rates. The new variable tracker deal offers a rate of 2.39pc for term (Bank of England base rate plus 1.89pc), a maximum loan-to-value of 60pc and a maximum borrowing amount of £1m. No fee is payable and there is the incentive of a free valuation for first and second-time borrowers, and free legal fees for those remortgaging. There is also the option to make overpayments.

Why is it good? Despite increases to selected variable rates, this latest tracker product at 2.39pc for term remains one of the top deals in the market. Borrowers concerned with costs will be pleased with generous incentives and with not having to pay an arrangement fee.

Mortgages: Yorkshire Building Society

Yorkshire's latest mortgage product review includes the launch of a three-year fixed-rate deal at 3.89pc, June 2014. The product has a maximum LTV of 75pc and a fee of £495. First and second-time borrowers can enjoy a free valuation and a £250 rebate, while those remortgaging will receive free legal fees. Flexible features are also offered, including overpayments of up to 10pc of the outstanding balance, underpayments and the option to take payment holidays.

Why is it good? This three-year deal takes its places comfortably in the best-buy tables. All borrowers will be pleased with a reasonable arrangement fee and generous incentives package.

Do you know what your jewellery is worth?

A steep rise in the value of gold, silver and gems means people could be significantly undervaluing the worth of their jewellery.

Engagement rings are among the most precious pieces of jewellery we own, but it is likely many of us don't appreciate their financial value.

Kate Middleton's engagement ring cost £28,000 when it was bought by Prince Charles for Diana in 1981.

At today's prices, it has been estimated that the oval 18-carat blue sapphire surrounded by 14 diamonds costs £85,000 – a rise in value of more than 200pc in the past 30 years.

"Obviously most couples won't be investing in anything as expensive as Kate's sapphire," said Jonathan Cracknell, household underwriter at Aviva.

"But whatever the price, it is important that homeowners check their valuables are insured for the right amount.

"Engagement and eternity rings have huge sentimental value and often customers are devastated to lose them, so it's important that at least they are compensated financially for such items.

"Even if you have had a special piece of jewellery for only two or three years, it is likely its value has increased in that time."

Aviva said that white gold and platinum solitaire diamond rings were the most common items it replaced for its customers in the second half of last year, but they are typically worth £850 more than a decade ago.

Eternity rings have risen by more than 130pc to an average value of nearly £1,300 during the same period.

A reputable jeweller, such as one that is a National Association of Goldsmiths registered valuer,

JEWELLERY CONCERN: Even the most high-profile of brides-to-be must be aware of the value of rings will be able to tell you what your jewellery is worth. Once you have a new valuation, check with your home insurer that you're properly covered.

Updating your policy is likely to cost only a few pounds a year – if anything at all – and will prove to be well worth it should disaster strike.

EDITOR'S VIEW...

A RED tape regulation website has been set up by Government. Prime Minister David Cameron hopes businessmen across the country will use the site to highlight the regulations and bureaucracy they feel are an unnecessary burden on their everyday working lives. The feedback will be used to cut through reams of red tape, paving the way for private sector-led growth. The initial focus is on the retail industry.

Clegg's growth fund millions head North as Kent loses out

By Simon Robinson

simon.robinson@archant.co.uk

KENT businesses failed to secure a single penny of the first £450 million portion of the Government's billion pound growth pot.

Deputy Prime Minister Nick Clegg said on Tuesday that more than 27,000 jobs will be safeguarded as a direct result of the first round of Regional Growth Fund cash and a further associated 100,000 jobs will be created.

Yorkshire, Humberside, the North West and North East regions secured the majority of the funding.

Chelmsford-based e2v Technologies (UK) Ltd was the South East and East of England's sole successful bid.

The number of unsuccessful Kent bids is not yet known. The second round of the fund, worth nearly £1 billion, is now open.

Mr Clegg said: "I am delighted to announce the first successful bids for the Regional Growth Fund. I was bowled over by the quality of the bids. This money will now help create and safeguard jobs in some of the communities worst hit by the economic downturn.

"This funding is a step towards rebalancing our economy away from an unhealthy over-reliance on a small number of industries and a few areas.

"We need to spread opportunity across the whole country, drawing on our many talents.

"I know that with the right support these businesses can work with their communities and together play their part in leading the country back into prosperity."

Business Secretary Vince Cable said: "Supporting job creation in the regions is vital if we are to drive growth in our communities.

"We received a large number of ambitious and highly competitive bids to this first round of the Regional Growth Fund, which will help businesses across the country to expand and create thousands of new jobs.

"The Regional Growth Fund is a competitive fund and we wanted to see proposals that created jobs in the private sector, in areas of deprivation and at risk of suffering from public sector cuts.

"I'm confident that the successful bids we

NICK CLEGG: the Deputy PM expects the first round of RGF cash to safeguard thousands of jobs and create many more have chosen will deliver on this." And Lord Heseltine, chairman of the Independent Advisory Panel, said: "I believe the first £450m of Regional Growth Fund cash, which leveres in around £2.5bn of private sector investment, supports projects delivering real jobs to real people on the ground now.

"They show the Government is getting actively behind the private sector to rebalance our economy. I have always believed in the need to give real support to small businesses for whom bidding for £1m is way beyond what they could normally expect.

"That's why we are providing more than £150m to give targeted support to small businesses, which are the lifeblood of our economy.

"That is why I am also pleased that high street banks are joining the Government in supporting micro-finance through the Community Development Finance Associations.

"Some £30m of Regional Growth Fund will be matched by a further £30m from two banks. In addition, we are in detailed discussion with the banks over options for schemes to get additional finance to small businesses in economically vulnerable parts of England. We want to develop effective mechanisms to support growing small businesses and small projects through the Regional Growth Fund."

After considering the large number of high quality bids submitted to round one, ministers decided to allocate more than £450m rather than the £250m originally envisaged to ensure the benefits to the economy are realised as quickly as possible.

To promote the second round of the fund and encourage quality bids that meet the objectives and criteria, there will be roadshows across England to speak with businesses and organisations with an interest in submitting a bid to advise them on all aspects of the fund.

A schedule of the roadshows will be available in due course at www.bis.gsi.gov.uk/rgf.

The closing date for round two is Friday, July 1. There may be a further smaller round if unallocated funds remain after rounds one and two.

COMMENT

IT IS now crunch time for the Kent, East Sussex and Essex Local Enterprise Partnership. The 44 LEP board members from the three counties have settled all the governance matters and must now look at what goals they want to achieve.

Kent Invicta Chamber of Commerce chief executive Jo James said the LEP must focus on areas of commonality if they are to create jobs and deliver growth in the region. James goes on to state that the LEP's size may give it power and influence with key Government figures, and it may well do so.

But the potential disadvantages surely outweigh the positives. The county's business leaders would be much better placed to handle the fall-out of Pfizer's withdrawal from its Sandwich research and development site, for example, had Government given the green light to a separate Kent and Medway LEP.

But now the intricate business needs of the county will be placed into a pot alongside the needs of Essex and East Sussex.

There is no guarantee that what will stimulate growth and create jobs across the South East will work in Kent.

The giant LEP we have been lumped with runs the risk of becoming a compromise partnership, delivering mediocre results for all.

How the LEP delivers growth in these conditions will soon be discovered.

Constancy of interest rates a sensible move for all, says IoD chief

THE Bank of England has once again declined to raise interest rates.

The Monetary Policy Committee (MPC) has faced pressure to raise the rate from its current record-low position of 0.5 per cent, in a bid to bring inflation down.

But their decision to maintain the current interest rate has been backed by the Institute of Directors, British Chambers of Commerce and other financial bodies.

IoD South director Roger Broad said: "The outlook for interest rates is on a knife edge and we support the very difficult decision the MPC has taken to not increase them.

"Whilst everyone is focused on potential mistakes in fiscal policy, we think there is a greater danger from a mistake in monetary policy and so we appreciate the level of consideration that will have gone into this.

"We believe had the MPC taken the decision to raise interest rates there could have been serious consequences for the business community, which has been battered by the recession and the cuts in public spending.

"In the current economic climate, businesses need support and stability, which this move will provide.

"Furthermore, an increase in interest rates now would have

WELL said Roger Broad. He's captured exactly why interest rates need to stay low for business and the economy.

Current inflation is caused by the cost of supplies and the weakness of the pound, not overspending by consumers.

The pound will only become strong again through a growing and stable economy, not short term hot money attracted in by another 0.5 per cent return.

Delight as Beach Scene attracts record bid

AN AUCTION house enjoyed a money-spinning opening night after attracting a new world record bid for an Alan Lowndes painting.

Folkestone-based Grand Auctions sold the British painter's Beach Scene for £30,000 – surpassing the previous high bid by £1,000.

The proud new owner of the 1964 artwork is Bill Clark, of Clark Art Ltd, Cheshire, who is holding an exhibition of renowned Northern artists featuring Lowry and Lowndes.

Clark said: "Lowndes' work is quite scarce since he was not as prolific as some, so when I heard this painting was available I was very excited."

"Its large size sets it apart and the fact that it is a beach scene gives it a very wide appeal. Lowndes and Lowry were very much from the same stable and when you consider the record for a Lowry is £3.7 million, you can appreciate why Lowndes is in demand."

Grand Auctions specialist Jonathan Riley, who published a biography of the artist last year, said: "Lowndes' paintings are much sought after. There was considerable interest in this painting and we had high hopes of establishing a new record, which we have achieved."

"The vendor acquired the painting years ago directly from the family."

"In 1964 the Lowndes family moved from St Ives to the village of Halestow after he had enjoyed successful exhibitions. The year 1964 was very productive for Lowndes, who completed 40 canvases, including Beach Scene."

"This painting shows all the qualities of Lowndes at his very best."

Invicta chief determined to make supersize LEP work

Chamber boss Jo James would have preferred a Kent and Medway partnership, but the newly formed three-county regional body will bring clout. Simon Robinson reports

CHAMBER of Commerce chiefs will meet next month to set out the goals of the region's supersize Local Enterprise Partnership.

The 24 executive board members appointed to the Kent, East Sussex and Essex Partnership must now decide upon how to achieve the economic growth the Government is expecting from their newly-created, locally-run system, which replaces Labour's Regional Development Agencies.

Kent Invicta Chamber of Commerce chief executive Jo James said it was vital the South East LEP members worked together as one.

"We have to look at areas of commonality in order to set the key areas we want to push ahead with," she said.

"These may include the lower Thames Crossing, rural broadband, planning and transport infrastructure.

"I thought our LEP was too big to begin with and favoured a Kent and Medway partnership. But we've got what we've got. Now we have to make it work."

"Our main strength is our size and it does bring advantages. We are going to have sway with the Government on combined issues such as coastal regeneration, which affects us, East Sussex, and Essex."

"We have to ensure the LEP focuses on issues that benefit the whole area."

James was keen to point out that the LEP alone would not be able to deliver economic growth in Kent and needed support from other business organisations and bodies.

"We cannot get roped into thinking 'everything will get done through the LEP,'" she said. "It's very important to have a strong Kent and Medway plan as we have to have county-specific priorities and we need a structure working underneath the LEP to help inspire growth. That's the next stage to be looking at.

"We want to bring relevant bodies together so we don't have any duplication. It's about finding a mechanism where people can slot in and help promote Kent interests together."

"The LEP has to be driven from the bottom up."

Kent Invicta Chamber and county council leader Cllr Paul Carter have both asked the Government to reconsider its one Enterprise Zone per LEP policy, arguing that the zones should be allocated through necessity rather than by numbers. If the Government cannot be swayed that could provide the South East's LEP board members with their first obstacle.

James conceded: "Thanet is a prime area for an Enterprise Zone, but the Thames Gateway is also a prime area.

"Our LEP partners will also feel they are just as deserving of an Enterprise Zone, so how we work that out will be one of our first challenges."

The Federation of Small Businesses (FSB) is urging its members and businesses in the region to write to councillors and MPs to raise their concerns about the role of the British Chambers of Commerce (BCC) in LEPs.

The FSB, along with other organisations, has expressed its disappointment that the BCC has been awarded responsibility for running a group bringing together the partnerships.

FSB Kent and Medway chairman Roger House said: "In Kent we have worked hard with all the business groups to ensure our 6,700 members' views have been represented on the LEP. We are disappointed that the Government has not chosen to continue with this collaborative approach."

"Since the announcement that LEPs were to replace Regional Development Agencies, we have worked to develop a strong relationship with other business organisations to ensure no group was unrepresented and we have ensured the voice of business has been heard."

"We are urging all small firms in the region – not just our members – to write to councillors and MPs to express their concern that the quango will be led by just one organisation. A collaborative approach would have been the sensible option, to ensure that partnerships work to their full potential."

TRAINING

University reveals studying pays off

COMPANIES that invest in managerial training perform better than less skill-seeking competitors, a new study has revealed.

Kent Business School at the University of Kent found that while human, financial and technological resources are all important, it is the way that managements use these that ultimately influences company growth.

Centre director Dr Mark Gilman said: "The key is firms' ability to absorb and exploit knowledge."

"Firms that are open to external sources of advice and take advantage of opportunities for managerial learning and knowledge seemingly outperform their competitors."

"But at a time when managerial personal development opportunities should be supported, the UK government has chosen to pull funding away from regional business support and advisory services."

"However, this is where universities like Kent can still step in and provide these much-needed learning opportunities for our region's businesses."

The university's full findings will be published next month.

LITTLE ACORN: Tammy Woodhouse with Millbrook staff and young guest

How going back to family firm's roots put spring in Tammy's step

FOR most Britons, a sun-soaked summer is merely a welcome break from the dreary and rainy norm. But for businesses such as Millbrook, soaring spring temperatures and glorious sunshine are crucial to its annual income.

So much so that the family-run firm, which has garden centres in Gravesend and Crowborough, East Sussex, starts its preparations at the turn of the year.

Managing director Tammy Woodhouse said: "January and February are always critical for us. We have to make sure we have a lot of stock in place because as soon as the sun comes out in spring it just goes mad."

"We can't afford to miss out on the rush because we are massively dependent on a good spring. If we don't take the money during the three months between March and May we won't make it back."

"Thankfully this year we've got a late Easter, which is perfect for us, and an extra Bank Holiday. Everything is set up for it to be a good year. With the weather we have been having, business is always amazing."

"When we get three to four good days in a row, particularly running up to a weekend, then we know we are going to be hectic."

This year's spring and summer returns are particularly important for Millbrook, with retail giant Tesco moving into the industry through the purchase of the Dobbies garden centre chain, which has already begun expanding across the South East.

Woodhouse, who took over the role of managing director after her mother's retirement from the firm two years ago, said the market was changing rapidly.

"It's becoming increasingly competitive," she said.

"I think we're one of the last retail industries that's still very independent as there are a lot of strong, family businesses like us across the country, but that's all changing."

"Tesco has bought Dobbies and is opening them throughout the region. They have a store in Ashford and are opening another in Gillingham soon. It's changing the market really fast and there's now lots of pressure being put on us."

"We've got to try to keep doing things a bit differently here to make sure we keep our customers happy. We always make sure the quality of our plants is

The BIG Interview

Nurturing the family's garden centre firm wasn't Tammy Woodhouse's first choice of career, but the Millbrook MD has grown to love the role she took on when her mother retired, she tells Business Week editor Simon Robinson second to none and the fact we grow a lot of our own plants in our own nursery sets us apart.

"We've just re-landscaped our plant area, arranging plants in themed gardens rather than having straight rows of plants, like in supermarket aisles."

"It's about getting people to see our garden centres as a place they want to come to. We want it to feel relaxed, a bit more like a park so they walk around and get inspired."

"That's something I don't think the bigger chains will want to be doing, they are more about big volumes and that supermarket mentality."

"We've got to keep being different and friendly. Our customer service has to be fantastic to ensure our family feel remains. That's also why our cafés are such an integral part of what we do. Garden centres are increasingly seen as leisure destinations. If we didn't have a café we wouldn't have that added reason for people to come."

"We have people who come here every day for their morning coffee. It's quite a different style of retail to supermarkets. We're not a necessity. People come because it's a pleasure for them – it's their hobby."

Woodhouse remains committed to her parents' home-from-home, welcoming independent ethos, but this does not prevent her from wanting to further build the company.

Currently Millbrook's two garden centres, production nursery and landscaping arm generate an annual turnover of £5.5 million, excluding VAT, and has 125 members of staff on its books.

Speaking at the company's Gravesend garden centre last Monday morning, the MD said: "I'm really proud of what my parents have achieved and it's fantastic that I've got this opportunity to take things forward."

"We've got three- and five-year plans for the business. For this centre we have planning permission to expand again, to double the size of the restaurant. And we're also looking to add £1 million of sales in the garden centre during the next two years."

"We also want to expand Crowborough and also start selling online – lots of growth all round. We are currently looking at how we can provide the link between our garden centres and the landscaping sides of the business."

"Whether that's through a personal shopper service, someone coming out to your garden and giving advice or a maintenance service we're not yet sure, but we want to make Millbrook much more linked up."

"We have to do all this early because otherwise we're going to miss the boat. That's part of the reason we've just invested in our Gravesend centre."

"We have taken a risk and borrowed a lot of money from the bank, but to stay ahead we've got to take risks."

Woodhouse is clearly passionate about the business, but her ascension to the Millbrook throne was by no means a formality.

"I actually said I would never come

DIGGING IN: Millbrook MD Tammy Woodhouse, bottom left, took over when her mum retired two years ago and is determined to keep growing the business into the family business," she said.

"But when my father died some 13 years ago I came and worked with mum for a year. It was during this time that I realised I loved the business.

"My parents had said that if I wanted to join the company I had to have something to offer so I left to study a garden design course and work in retail before rejoining the business seven years ago."

Woodhouse's return to the family firm's fold coincided with the garden boom generated by the BBC's popular Alan Titchmarsh-fronted Groundforce makeover show.

"When Groundforce was on television it was amazing," she recalled.

"They would feature something on the show and the very next day we would be inundated with people asking for it. That has dropped away."

"The thing people are now talking about is growing their own fruit and veg. During the last two years we've seen a huge growth in demand for that. This year it's really picking up, with vegetable seeds outselling flower seeds."

"It's all part of the rise of the 'staycation'. We've seen that people are taking fewer holidays and are investing a bit more in their gardens. There's also been a rise in the number of customers wanting to get their kids involved as children are learning about growing fruit and vegetables at school.

"Lots of cookery programmes are also championing homegrown food, so there's lots of things happening at once, making customers think about trying it at home."

All of which links in perfectly with Millbrook's mission statement.

Woodhouse explained: "We want to inspire, educate and equip our customers to grow their garden. We're really trying to inspire people to get out into their garden – and not just our traditional customers. We also want to encourage new homeowners to take up gardening."

"More and more people are getting back to basics and want to do more in their garden. We are in a great position to be able to make the most of that."

As I make my way back to the garden centre's car park, which is already packed with enthusiastic gardeners, I ask Woodhouse for her top tip to brighten up a home on the cheap.

"Put a fruit tree in," she said. "A nice apple or pear tree will suit every garden and they don't have to be big. You can even grow them in a pot. They're lovely to look at and you get so much satisfaction from watching them grow."

'Boardroom quotas won't do women any favours'

TAMMY Woodhouse has rejected calls for a quota system to be introduced in order to ensure women break through the glass ceiling.

The suggestion was touted by former trade minister Lord Davies in his recent Women on Boards report, which threatened big businesses with a by-the-numbers scheme as a way of increasing the quota of women who reach boardroom positions.

But Woodhouse said: "I don't agree with a quota system. Appointments should be made on merit. If women are seen to be put into positions just to fit a quota, it doesn't do any favours for anyone."

"There needs to be more flexibility for women to be able to come back into the workplace after having a family and then go on to achieve."

"We have a lot of women working for us in senior positions and this is where we as a small business can really benefit. We can offer the flexibility to women who are perhaps looking to work part-time around their family commitments, in a way that big businesses cannot."

The Women on Boards report sets big business the goal of raising the number of women in top posts to 25 per cent by 2015.

Today, women occupy just 12.5 per cent of boardroom seats on FTSE 100 firms.

Hitting Davies' target equates to a third of all new board appointments – 135 – going to women during the next five years. If the 25 per cent mark is not reached, Lord Davies said the Government would be right to consider bringing in enforced quotas, as adopted by Norway, France and Spain.

Red tape launch despite IoD's cutting conclusion

By Simon Robinson

simon.robinson@archant.co.uk

BUSINESSES are being urged to help the Government cut through reams of stifling red tape and regulations.

Last week Prime Minister David Cameron and Business Secretary Vince Cable launched the Red Tape Challenge website, which gives visitors the chance to have their say on regulations that affect their everyday lives.

Web users can speak up for well-designed rules or challenge regulations they feel are an unnecessary burden.

Mr Cameron said: "We need to tackle regulation with vigour, both to free businesses to compete and create jobs, and to give people greater freedom and personal responsibility."

"Of course we need proper standards, for example in areas such as fire safety and food safety. So where regulation is well designed and proportionate, it should stay."

"But it is hard to believe we need regulations on issues such as ice-cream van jingles. That's why I want us to be the first Government in modern history to leave office having reduced the overall burden of regulation, rather than increasing it."

"Our starting point is that a regulation should go, or its aim be achieved in a different, non-government way, unless there is a clear and good justification for government being involved. Be in no doubt: all those unnecessary rules that place ridiculous burdens on our businesses and on society – they must go, once and for all."

The campaign is part of the Government's growth agenda and will tackle the stock of more than 21,000 statutory instruments that are putting barriers in the way of businesses, volunteers and the public.

The first area of national life to go under the microscope will be retail.

Following this, every few weeks a new set of regulations, organised around themes, will open on the website for anyone to comment on.

Once a theme has closed to the public, the Prime Minister has said in a letter to all ministers

SHARP EDGE: The Red Tape Challenge website has been launched by the Coalition Government that they will have three months to explain why a regulation is still required, otherwise it will be scrapped.

Mr Cable said: "The retail sector is a key part of our economy and essential to driving private sector-led growth."

"It also has to deal with hundreds of regulations covering everything from employment law and health and safety through to consumer protection and the sale of offensive weapons."

"Some of these regulations are there for good reasons: protecting employees, businesses or the public. But some, like the Indication of Prices (Beds) Order, serve no purpose at all."

"That's why this campaign is different to the deregulation drives that have gone before. The onus is now on ministers to justify a regulation, rather than on you telling us to do something about it."

"I urge people to visit the website and take a few minutes to tell us the regulations you deal with on a daily basis."

"This is your chance to make sure consumers are properly protected from unscrupulous traders or give us the evidence we need to remove the unnecessary bureaucracy that stops your business from growing."

However, the Institute of Directors quickly brought the Government's Red Tape Challenge fanfare crashing back to earth.

Head of regulatory affairs Alexander Ehmann said: "The IoD is concerned that the Red Tape Challenge will have as little impact as previous efforts. The truth is the Government knows where the regulatory bodies are buried. It's not a case of asking businesses for suggestions again and again, it's about getting on with the tough decisions that deregulation requires."

PLEDGE: Paul Carter wants to boost the building industry

Carter pledges to remove building blockages

COUNTY council leader Paul Carter has vowed to cut through red tape and over-regulation in a bid to boost the building industry.

Cllr Carter made the pledge at a meeting with businesses from the county's construction and development sector, Kent Economic Board and the Kent Developer Group.

"You cannot overstate the importance of construction and the development sector," he said.

"It is worth more than £1.7 billion in Kent and employs up to 30,000 people, directly employing six per cent of the workforce, compared with just 4.5 per cent nationally."

"Since 1995, employment in construction in Kent has risen by more than 70 per cent, compared with a total rise in all employment of less than 20 per cent."

"To get things moving, we need to cut through bureaucracy, over-regulation, risk-averse bankers and other blockages. Since 1980, the number of planning regulations has grown from two to more than 20, which adds at least 25 per cent of building costs. However, we now have an opportunity to change things."

"The Government is willing to work with us, so let's look at innovative solutions and make it a conducive environment for business to get on and start building."

The meeting was chaired by Terry Mitchell, project director of Skanska Infrastructure Development UK. He said: "Construction plays a crucial role in boosting the economy. We are fortunate that KCC is committed to growth and infrastructure projects. The public and private sectors need to work together and be proactive in how we utilise the Government's planning framework. We need the right policies, sound leadership and the right people to help support economic growth."

KCC's economic development boss Cllr Kevin Lynes said: "We want to do all we can to help Kent companies benefit from construction programmes and keep the taxpayer pound in the county."

"We are committed to driving efficiencies through the supply chain, by looking at our procurement process and helping the industry by providing tailored training for young people."

"It is a time for boldness, especially in the current policy vacuum, to help shape policy. So let us work together to make this change and help unlock the county's potential."

Half-truths cannot compensate for loss of free legal advice

Matthew Woodhams says the government has exaggerated legal bills to reduce its costs

YOU are about to lose the right to free legal advice.

The Government has decided to act to try to remove what is claimed to be a crippling burden on business, industry and government – known as the 'compensation culture'.

It is to implement massive reforms, based on the recommendations of experts, which will transform the system into a quick, cheap and efficient process.

The problem is that this is not entirely accurate. The awards which are reported in the media are generally exaggerated to make a better story, particularly by the tabloid national press.

Legal costs tend to actually be quite modest, the large amounts sometimes incurred are actually caused by defendants refusing to compensate the genuine victims of wrong.

Even the Government has been less than candid. It is the biggest defendant in personal injury actions and is reforming the system to reduce the costs. Fair enough, you might say, but it has exaggerated the actual cost by more than 50 per cent to try to push changes through.

The truth is that personal injury claim numbers have been falling, year on year, for nearly a decade.

To be fair, as only half the story has been told and half the facts are true, only half the recommendations for reform are being introduced. The problem is that this will make the system worse. And if you have been injured, you will end up with less money.

Why? Lawyers don't get paid if a claim fails, but they get an extra fee for each case they do win, called a success fee.

This is to cover the cost of those lost cases and ensure that everyone has the chance to see a lawyer for free if you have had an accident. The success fee at present is paid by the losing party.

The main change that is likely to happen is this fee is now going to be paid out of your damages instead.

This means losing 25 per cent of your compensation. It will probably only be for new case once the reforms are introduced next year. So what should you do?

If you have a claim, don't delay in consulting a solicitor. If you start the case now you will keep all your damages. If you delay, it might cost you 25 per cent of your compensation.

Have your say on proposals before workplace dispute window closes

EMPLOYERS are being urged to have their say on the Government's public consultation on resolving workplace disputes.

The feedback window, which closes on Wednesday, gives businesses the chance to comment on proposals to reform employment laws.

While many of the plans will help improve the efficiency of the employment tribunal system, Furley Page solicitor Sian Stubberfield warned that the amendments could be seen as a mixed blessing.

One proposal in particular that is likely to be extremely unpopular with the business community is the introduction of financial penalties on employers who have failed in their legal obligations towards an employee.

Stubberfield said: "The proposal would give a tribunal an additional power to impose a penalty equal to half the total amount awarded to the claimant."

"This would be payable to the Exchequer rather than the claimant, with an upper limit of £5,000."

Employers would be encouraged to pay quickly, with a reduction of 50 per cent of the financial penalty available to those who paid within 21 days.

"The aim is to reduce the number of tribunal claims, but employers may feel the Government is giving with one hand under some proposals and effectively taking back the potential benefits under this proposal."

Other key proposals in the consultation paper, which has been published by the Department for Business, Innovation and Skills and the Tribunals Service, include: increasing the qualifying period for bringing a claim for unfair dismissal from one year's service to two years' service; measures to encourage early conciliation and mediation, with all claims required to be submitted initially to Acas instead of the Tribunals Service; and introducing a fee payable by both claimants and respondents at a tribunal to try to prevent claims that have little or no prospect of success.

Stubberfield added: "Overall, the Government's proposals aim to encourage workplace disputes to be resolved at an early stage, cutting the number of claims that proceed to full hearings and ultimately reducing the amount of time and money that employers have to invest to defend themselves."

The full consultation paper can be viewed at www.bis.gov.uk/Consultations/resolving-workplace-disputes.

COHABITATION

Document is essential tool

UNMARRIED live-in couples are being advised to sign a Cohabitation Agreement.

Gullands said the document would give security to those do not have key rights protected through marriage or a civil partnership.

The Maidstone-based solicitors' Melissa Markham said: "People still mistakenly believe they are someone's common law husband or wife but this is just a phrase which describes people who live together and in reality they have few rights."

"Therefore couples who are looking to protect themselves now and to provide certainty in regard to their future wishes should their relationship end due to death or otherwise, should consider a Cohabitation Agreement."

"The Agreement should also cover how those assets should be dealt with on separation or on the death of one of the parties."

"For couples buying property together I would certainly say this is an essential financial tool which can provide peace of mind."

GUIDES

Rethinking retirement

SAGA has published two guides to help elderly employees and their employers respond to the end of retirement age regulations.

The move was prompted by the abolition of the default retirement age, which saw workers laid off at 65.

Saga director-general Dr Ros Altmann said: "We are delighted that the Government abolished the default retirement age. It should have been done years ago. We have been very concerned to see recent cases of employers outrageously forcing their workers in to retirement before the new regime sets in – this is a sheer disgrace."

Launching the Saga Guides to Rethinking Retirement, Dr Altmann added: "It's not just a moral responsibility to let people work as long as they want, it's now also a legal responsibility – but both employers and employees may well find the first steps into the unknown to be a bit daunting – so we've done what we can to help make this an easier cultural transition."

MEDIATION

Move to cut court cases

GOVERNMENT has introduced measures to increase the use of mediation in a bid to cut the number of cases going to court.

The new court rules in family cases were introduced on Wednesday, April 6.

Whitehead Monckton's senior solicitor and accredited family lawyer specialist Jonathan Miller said: "The rules do not make the use of mediation mandatory, but a party who starts their claim without giving it consideration risks their claim being adjourned to allow those enquiries to be completed."

"In a time of public spending cutbacks, the government is anxious to see disputes resolved out of court, and so wishes to see the use of mediation increased."

"However, these enquiries do not need to be considered in cases of emergency or where there has been domestic violence in the past. It remains to be seen whether this will increase the use of mediation, and save parties the expense of court proceedings."

Power station apprentice scoops award

A NUCLEAR engineer based at Dungeness B power station has scooped the National Apprentice of the Year Award for the South East.

Vicky Mitchell, 21, (pictured) who works in the control and instrumentation department within the maintenance area of the plant, became a qualified technician last August.

Actor Chris Barrie – aka Rimmer in the 1990s sci-fi sitcom Red Dwarf – presented Vicky with her prize at a ceremony organised by the National Skills Academy for Nuclear and Cogent Sector Skills Council.

"I was so excited to win the award," she said. "I chose a career in engineering particularly in the nuclear industry because I have always had an interest in the Dungeness B, which sits on our coastline and has been a part of my life from an early age as my dad also works at the station.

"It's great to have a career where I can go into work and learn something new every day. I also have the opportunity to do a degree and expand on my career further, either in an engineering role or a leadership role."

EDF Energy runs modern apprenticeship schemes at all its nuclear power stations, with seven apprentices due to start their training at Dungeness in August.

The four-year programme includes two years at the Royal Navy bases at HMS Sultan and Collingwood, near Portsmouth, with the final two predominantly based at the power station.

Vicky said: "An apprenticeship will give you the skills for life which can give you the best opportunities.

"Commitment is important and you need to commit while you're in school, making sure you get the best grades you can so that when you come out you can choose which way you want to enter into the industry, either through an apprenticeship or through a graduate scheme."

Dungeness B station director Graham Finn spoke of his delight at Vicky's award win.

He said: "I was very proud and I hope this spurs on other women to join the industry and

Centre offers advice for a greener future

By Steve Knight

STUDENTS, engineers and architects are among those set to benefit from the opening of a new eco-friendly construction centre.

The Build4 Sustainable Construction Demo Centre in Dover is the brainchild of the community interest company BSK-CiC, which aims to keep Kent working by giving hundreds of local businesses access to a wide range of new building techniques.

Visitors to the centre will also find out about eco-friendly products including paints, insulation materials, timber, roof tiles, mortar, render, and solar panels.

BSK-CiC chief executive Bob Jones said: "I am delighted to welcome the opening of Kent's new Build4 Sustainable Construction Demo Centre.

"As an organisation we support hundreds of businesses across the South East every month, but we rarely see the fruits of our labour.

"With this centre we can show the business community the opportunity presented by the sustainable construction market, what it looks and feels like, and how they can take advantage of it."

Mr Jones said the principal aim of the demonstration centre was to knock down the barriers and address the misconceptions to using more sustainable building materials.

One of six centres across northern Europe – including in France, Belgium, the Netherlands and Germany – Build4 also has the capacity to host small events, meetings, training sessions and seminars.

Mr Jones said: "It is really exciting to see design, innovative materials and skills coming together in one place.

"The centre is really well placed to inspire our designers as to what is possible, our builders as to how to achieve sustainable structures, and our craftsmen and women to be able to deliver it on the ground."

Based in Chatham High Street, BSK-CiC is a not-for-profit organisation with a 15-year track record of delivering UK and European-funded programmes across the South East. The company says it is dedicated to supporting small and medium-size enterprises to develop and grow, with a mission to inspire them about tomorrow's world and equip them to succeed".

In keeping with its responsibility for community interest, BSK-CiC commissioned two students to provide the designs for the interior of the new centre.

They were Neil Quinn, who recently graduated from the London-based Central Saint Martins College of Art and Design, and Rafat Jahandieh, who is currently in her second year of studies at the Canterbury campus of the University for the Creative Arts.

The project team has also been collaborating with the Dover Skills Centre, which is located in the adjacent building.

A spokesman said: "The centre has provided students of construction trade courses the ideal opportunity to gain experience on using the materials that will be part of their

Young brickies show how it's done in regional construction showcase

BRICKLAYING students at Thanet College laid the foundation for a sturdy future in building with success in a regional competition.

The event was divided into two groups – senior and junior – with participants in the senior section competing for a place in the national final at Bridgewater College, Somerset, on Thursday, June 23.

Thanet College student Darron Wiltshire won in the junior category and was described by the judges as "outstanding", while Michael Olley came third in the seniors, finishing just 15 points off top spot.

Bricklaying students from eight different colleges in and around London were given a set amount of time to build to a prearranged specification, with Thanet the only Kent college that took part.

Former world champion speed-bricklayer Tony Gregory made a guest appearance at the event and said he was delighted with the work on display, especially given the difficulty of the competition.

When asked what he thought of the students' performance, Mr Gregory said: "The lads are doing well under pressure. The work they are doing is of a good standard."

Thanet College will host next year's competition of the Guild of Bricklayers, which was formed in 1932 to promote high standards of craftsmanship in brickwork.

Philanthropy is the future, says minister

GOVERNMENT minister David Willetts has praised the University for the Creative Arts for the financial support it provides to students through philanthropic donations.

The universities minister spoke during a fundraising event hosted by UCA – which has campuses in Rochester, Maidstone and Canterbury – which was also used to thank those who had donated to last year's scholarship fund.

These included Vogue editor Alexandra Shulman, fashion designer Anne Tyrrell, former MasterChef host Loyd Grossman, and artist Humphrey Ocean.

Mr Willetts said: "With money getting tighter in higher education, philanthropy and contributions from people who want to show their support for higher education matter even more."

"The obligation of the Exchequer and taxpayers to finance higher education is very important but we can't do it on our own. It is therefore great to see that UCA has already put so much effort into raising funds, and that students are already benefiting from the scholarship programme that has been put in place."

Mr Willetts added: "What your university does is excellent. I love its diversity and its mission for the creative arts, and I want you to know we greatly appreciate the distinctive contribution UCA makes to our higher education system."

UCA officials also used the event at the House of Commons to announced the launch of the 2011 scholarship fund – worth almost £50,000 – that will help support some 22 stu-students during their time at the university.

They are offered to undergraduate and postgraduate students from any background who show outstanding creative potential in their chosen field in the arts.

Head of development Matthew Horton said: "Scholarship donations are the bedrock of UCA's fundraising programme. Not only do they give vital support to students across all disciplines but they also allow donors to engage with the UCA community in a truly positive way."

Students earn Young Enterprise victory with unique learning tools

BUSINESS-SAVVY pupils at Dover Grammar School for Girls have won the district's Young Enterprise competition for the second year running.

The group, which branded itself as FUNdamentools, won a trophy, certificate and cheque for £250 for its design of a reading and audio book aimed at children who have learning difficulties.

They will now go on to represent Dover at the Kent final on May 4.

"Once again there was strong competition from across the schools taking part," said Ande Case, chairman of the Dover area board for Young Enterprise.

"A wide range of products, sales success, learning and the prospect of future businesses reinforces just how pivotal Young Enterprise can be in developing our young entrepreneurs."

"I would like to personally thank each company – and indeed each member of those companies – for all their hard work, and congratulate them on their achievements."

"They should be very proud of themselves."

Prizes were also awarded to pupils from St Edmund's Catholic School, who won 'best company presentation', and Sir Roger Manwood's School, whose Zest group won best 'company display stand' and whose Swift team won 'best company report'.

MidKent College's dedicated training consultancy provides a professional service that is dedicated to the needs of local companies. Training courses can be delivered in-company or in the first class facilities available at the College.

THE INTERVIEW

Massive appeal of bonsai guitar

Ed Hill finds out more about the massively popular orchestra that came from a small and unassuming start

LIKE the instrument they have done so much to promote, the Ukulele Orchestra of Great Britain started out small. Will Grove-White, one of the longest serving members, explained: "We have been going for more than 25 years. At the time ukuleles were not popular and we all sort of gravitated towards each other one way or another."

The show began as a one-off experiment playing in a pub by a group of friends who had got to know each other either at college or through music.

Grove-White said: "It just seemed a laugh to get together and play ukuleles. That turned into another show and another and 26 years later here we are wondering what happened."

Will Grove-White joined the orchestra while he was still a teenager.

He said: "I was 15 when I first started playing the ukulele. I was playing on my own because at that time that was all you could do. I read a piece about the orchestra in a paper and went along. I basically just kept pestering them and they eventually let me join."

The orchestra's ethos had its roots in punk. The attitude that anyone could buy and play the cheap instrument appealed to members.

"At the time it was a bit of an outsiders' instrument. It is also very easy to learn. You can crack out a few chords and you are on your way. It's also good for accompanying singing, very portable and cheap, so it has lots of things in its favour," said Grove-White.

The little guitar has its origins with early Portuguese sailors in the Pacific. They played a similar instrument, a braguina, which was then adopted by the Hawaiians.

Grove-White said: "It is small and simple. You could easily keep it stowed away in a ship. It's just very cheerful."

The group found that despite its simplicity, the instrument was amazingly versatile.

"We play everything from Tchaikovsky to Otis Reading, Nirvana and Shirley Bassey. The nice thing about the ukulele is there is no real history. We can play at a punk festival just as much as at a classical one," Will added.

He also believes the band's lack of rock star looks gives them a unique appeal: "Because we look so unpromising people are on our side and want us to do well. We are a pretty odd assemblage of misfits. No-one would have put this band together. I think that's part of the appeal, people just like us."

As a teenager Grove-White never imagined the little bonsai guitar – as it is nicknamed – could mean a lifetime in music.

He said: "It has turned into a full-time job. We do about 130 gigs a year. Last year we did Carnegie Hall in New York and sold that out and we are going back next year."

He added: "We never had agents or managers. We produce our records and manage our tours. It's about making music less pompous and what better way to do it than with a ukulele."

The Ukulele Orchestra of Great Britain will be at the Assembly Hall Theatre, Tunbridge Wells, on Saturday, May 7, see www.assemblyhall-theatre.co.uk to book. Also see www.ukulele-orchestra.com.

POLICE forces nationwide have come under fire in recent weeks over the low number of visible officers out manning the frontline. Although it can be argued the best crime-solving often goes on behind closed doors, last month's report by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary served to remind police of their duty to reassure the public at all times.

Having as many uniformed officers on patrol as possible is one of the best ways of doing so, but according to the HMIC fewer than 10 per cent of Kent Police staff are available to man the frontline at any one time – the third lowest figure in the country.

The force is currently going through a major restructure and is under pressure from Kent Police Authority to maintain a strong visible presence, with extra emphasis expected to be placed on neighbourhood policing in particular.

But amidst all the criticism it can be easy to forget the contribution made by Kent's army of almost 400 Police Community Support Officers – or PCSOs – who will no doubt have a huge role to play in the months and years to come.

It is they who will be heavily relied upon to provide the visibility the public demands, but then they wouldn't have it any other way.

"We are the eyes and ears of the police and we see ourselves as ambassadors for them as well," said 62-year-old Dougie Barr, PCSO for the Gravesend Central ward.

"I think the regular officers appreciate the job we do because we take things off them that they would otherwise have to do – things like parking problems and neighbourly disputes that are important to the public, but don't necessarily need to be dealt with by regular police."

"We are the ones who people often come to with their concerns because we are the ones on the ground. Quite a large number of people would actually prefer to come to us with information because we don't share the same powers as the police."

Having spent an hour on patrol with PCSO Barr one Friday afternoon, I was struck by just how many people he appeared to be on good terms with. Far from being a headmaster-type figure who the locals avoid, not a minute goes by when he isn't waving to residents from inside his patrol car or pulling over for a quick chat.

He also proudly points out that he is on "fist-bumping" terms with youngsters at the three schools in his ward.

"It's all about showing respect," said PCSO Barr. "In five or six years' time these children will be teenagers and young adults, and if I can build a healthy relationship with them now then hopefully we will continue to share that respect in the future."

First introduced to forces in 2002, PCSOs are often unfairly described as "pretend police" who wear similar uniforms, but have very little power and spend the majority of their days drinking cups of tea.

But the reality is that they provide a vital link between the public and police, becoming experts in the places, people and problems associated with particular wards.

Earning between £20,669 and £24,259 a year, their main function is to reduce low-level crime like littering, dog mess and other forms of anti-social behaviour.

"We deal with the issues that affect people's everyday lives, which in many ways are the things that matter most to them," said 27-year-old PCSO Kelly Shurmer of the Northfleet North ward.

"That's the bread and butter of what we do. Although burglaries, murders and the like are obviously terrible crimes, they're hopefully not going to affect people on a daily basis."

Highly regarded for their work in tackling anti-social behaviour, PCSOs could provide the answer to Kent Police's visibility dilemma. Reporter STEVE KNIGHT went out on patrol to see if they were up for the challenge of being the public face of modern policing

PCSO, DOUGIE BARR

PCSO Shurmer, who has ambitions of joining the regular police once the current recruitment freeze is lifted, is also proud of the relationship she has built up with the schools on her patch.

She is currently at the forefront of a campaign to stop people speeding and parking their cars on the busy road outside Rosherville Church of England Primary School where, in January, 2009, a 16-year-old boy was knocked down and killed.

"Kelly has been fantastic and has helped form a really positive partnership between the school and the police," said headteacher Becky Stoneham. "It makes such a difference when you're working together. She's that friendly face that anyone can talk to."

Kent Police is currently battling to save £50 million over the next four years due to a 20 per cent cut in government funding.

About 1,500 jobs are on the line as a result, including 500 officers and 1,000 support staff.

It can be no coincidence then that the force is considering granting PCSOs 13 new powers, including being able to fine under-18s for disorder related to alcohol consumption.

They could also end up issuing penalty notices for offences relating to fireworks, truancy, graffiti, flyposting and more.

However, questions have been raised as to where the line should be drawn and whether giving PCSOs extra powers could in some ways detract from the job they already do so well.

"It's good that they're considering giving us a little bit more, but I agree it shouldn't be too much because we don't want to put people off coming to talk to us," said PCSO Shurmer.

Kent Police has some big decisions to make about all aspects of crime-fighting and it is likely the force will look drastically different in the years to come.

But whatever happens, there will still be PCSOs on the county's streets. And despite what some people may have you believe, that is most definitely a good thing.

KENT REMEMBERED

FLYING VISIT: An aerial view of Gravesend airfield shows how it looked at the height of World War Two

Wartime memories of former RAF airfield inspire history project

Church programme backed by lottery funding

By Steve Knight

steve.knight@archant.co.uk

MEMORIES of bombing raids, rationing, and wartime games, are being recollected as part of a two-year oral history project.

Supported by a £33,000 grant from the Heritage Lottery Fund, the Games and Planes initiative aims to gather photographs, letters, stories and more from people who lived near Gravesend's former RAF airfield during World War Two.

Those behind the project, which is based at St Aidan's Church, hope to launch a website and booklet using the material provided.

The Reverend Richard Martin said: "There were people I came across in my ministry who had such wonderful stories to tell, so I felt there was a need to capture these memories before they were lost forever.

"The airfield side of the history of this area has been completed in great detail in terms of the planes and pilots who were here, but we didn't seem to have any memories of the people who used to live or work here."

"Houses were bombed and areas were evacuated, but nobody seems to have written anything down about that. I thought it was important to complement this very detailed history of the airfield with accounts of what life was like for the residents of the time."

Opened in 1932, the former Gravesend airport was originally a civil airfield before the RAF took it over at the start of the war.

The historic site has long since been redeveloped as the Riverview Park housing estate.

Led by Dartford-based project manager John Woodhead, the Games and Planes initiative is specifically targeting people who lived or worked in the Westcourt and Gravesend airfield areas between 1940 and 1950.

It also wants to hear from those who attended Westcourt School at the time.

A team of trained volunteers has started to interview the 50-plus people who have responded so far – a process expected to last until November.

"I've been delighted by the variety of the contributions made up to this point," said Rev Martin. "I was concerned at first that we'd hear the same sort of stories from everyone, but that hasn't been the case at all."

"We've had memories from people who lived in prefab buildings built by German prisoners of war, one person who was christened in a dress made from an old parachute, and lots of other accounts of how ordinary people lived their lives during the conflict."

Call 01474 351620 or email john.woodhead4@btinternet.com to register your interest in the project.

Eel-good factor that wowed critic Rayner

IVEN that Kent has one of the longest coastlines of any county in England and a strong fishing tradition, the county should have some of the best fish restaurants in the country. The reality is that there are surprisingly few that do it well, but hopefully those that do, stand out.

Wheeler's in Whitstable is a gem – perhaps still hidden even. Chef Mark Stubbs produces top-notch food served in a relic of a dining room. On Herne Bay's seafront is Le Petit Poisson, serving deliciously-prepared local catch, which can be devoured alfresco in the summer. And opening this June, in a purpose-built restaurant hanging over Folkestone harbour, is Rock Salt, where Gordon Ramsey's man at Claridges, Mark Sargeant, plays heavily on local fish and seafood.

A relative newcomer is Eddie Gilbert's in Ramsgate. In its short 18-month life, it has already collected awards and rave reviews galore, and there's a waiting list for weekend bookings. The fast rail link has made it a destination restaurant for Londoners looking for an escape from the big smoke, aided perhaps by praise from such well-known critics as Jay Rayner, who pronounced the "beautifully simple, exquisitely executed" soft duck egg with crisp breaded and deep-fried smoked eel soldiers his starter of the year 2010.

This particular dish is the inspired creation of chef Craig Mather, whose training with Michelin-starred chef Simon Haigue at Mallory Court in Leicestershire imbued him with a passion for fine dining. An ex-student of Thanet Catering College in Broadstairs, Craig is passionate about using fresh, local ingredients.

So much so that he may change his menu twice a day, depending on the catch brought in. The restaurant's close relationship with the fishermen in Ramsgate means he can produce dishes using local fish within hours of it being caught.

"We are very lucky here in Ramsgate to get fantastically fresh fish and seafood – anything from lobster and crab to Dover sole, seabass, cod, turbot, skate, mullet..." he says.

He also welcomes foraged food such as samphire and wild garlic, incorporating it all into an extensive menu that ranges from fish and chips (some of the best around) to more elaborately-constructed dishes, such as butter-roasted local cod fillet with a local foraged wild garlic and pea risotto and a black-pudding fritter.

Downstairs is a wet-fish shop, a consistent winner or runner-up in the best seafood retailer category of the Taste of Kent awards, and a fish-and-chips takeaway (offering chips cooked in a choice of beef dripping or vegetable oil).

Eddie Gilbert's award-winning streak goes as far as service, too, with restaurant manager Nick MacAskill voted winner for exceptional service in the Pride in Thanet 2010 awards. • Open Tuesday to Saturday, 11.30am-2.30pm and 5.30pm-9.30pm (last orders), and Sunday lunch (with a roast added to the menu), 11.30am-3.30pm.

EATING OUT

Feelgood food the way Mama likes to cook it

MAMA Feelgoods is a fine-food store as well as a craft cake and deli café selling local produce, fruit and vegetables, freshly-baked bread and cakes, a larger range of British cheeses, local wines, beers and sparkling wines.

Mama Feelgoods bakes on the premises a delicious range of cakes – the most popular are the rich chocolate brownies made with 70 per cent chocolate and a moist carrot cake coated in a marscapone frosting and sprinkled with walnuts. These are available to buy by the slice, or you can pre-order them whole.

The expert staff also make their own range of chef-prepared meals, Made By Mama, including lasagne, meatballs in rich tomato sauce, cottage pie, nut-roast and soups, which are all available from the freezer. They are ideal for those nights when you haven't time to cook but still want something as good as home-cooking.

Mama Feelgoods has just added a selection of free-range Kentish meats from Farmer Palmer and has also extended the range of those day-to-day food items, so alongside a delicious free-range egg pasta from Italy it also stocks an everyday pack of spaghetti.

The deli and café stock a great range of sweets and chocolates ready for those Easter treats, and the deli-style café serves breakfast, lunches and afternoon coffee.

Mama Feelgoods is open seven days a week, with plenty of free parking, so it is always convenient if you just need to pop in to get something for supper or wish to stock your larder with goodies.

RESTAURANT Review

Elegant Swan worth weight

SET in the trendy town of West Malling, The Swan restaurant certainly keeps to the tone of the area, oozing sophistication.

Despite losing its Michelin Bib Gourmand, which represents value for money, the 15th-century inn has retained its reputation.

I was armed with a friend who is himself a chef at a Michelin Star-rated establishment in Kent.

We relaxed with a drink at the bar before taking our seats in the small dining quarter. We were greeted with a small amuse-bouche of warm pumpkin soup that tasted like liquid gold. We both then had a Maldon rock oyster with shallot vinegar, £2 per oyster.

To start, I chose smoked haddock kedgeree with poached quail's eggs, £7. The rice was cooked perfectly and the milky sauce made sure the dish remained moist.

My friend devoured Sussex pork shoulder and leek terrine, £8 – the copper pot with grape chutney was a nice touch.

On to mains and I went for the venison shank and Parma ham pie, £17.50, which looked like something out of a Desperate Dan cartoon with the bone through the pastry.

My companion went for chicken breast with celeriac champ and truffles, £18, which he assured was a good choice.

For the final round I had the glazed orange tart with orange syrup, £7.

It was well presented, although the strong citrus taste of the syrup overpowered the orange tart. It was also a tad too cold, but the quality left nothing to be desired.

The final bill was no revelation, although I was surprised to see the 12.5 per cent service charge covered the pre-meal drinks in the bar.

The experience was pleasant, easy and tasteful, with some nice little extra touches. Something a little different.

Diversity key to quality in every corner

IN 2009, the Good Food Guide identified 'the East Kent Triangle' as an area of [gastronomic] excellence, with Faversham, Canterbury and Whitstable forming the corners.

This accolade not only reflects the fact that there are some great restaurants in that area, including Michelin-starred The Sportsman in Seasalter and Read's in Faversham, but also that a strong food infrastructure means that fresh, local ingredients are in abundance and available directly from producers through farmers' markets and farm shops, as well as through high-street shops and delis.

Along the same coast, this year's Michelin guide includes three restaurants from Thanet – Age & Sons, The Ambrette and Eddie Gilbert's.

Indeed, this quality can be found all over the county, and in addition to the two mentioned above, there are a further three Michelin-starred restaurants: Chapter One in Bromley, The West House in Biddenden and Apicus in Cranbrook.

Dining out in Kent is becoming ever-more interesting, with an increasing diversity in the county's gastronomic landscape – rural pubs, coastal gastro bars, stylish urban restaurants, old manor houses – making it a delightful area for gourmands.

Talk to any chef in the county, and they will extol the virtues of Kent's produce.

The unique combination of lush and fertile land, producing an abundance of fruit and vegetables, a long coastline, with a wide array of fish and seafood, and a temperate climate, makes the county an ideal location for a restaurant wanting to make the most of fresh, local ingredients.

Age & Sons Ramsgate

Why here...

Listed in the Michelin guide, Age & Sons offers fine dining using the best of local produce. You'll enjoy a wonderful ambience and charming service in this converted wine warehouse in Ramsgate, just minutes away from the sparkling marina.

On the menu...

Modern dishes, with gutsy flavours, created from locally-sourced – sometimes foraged – ingredients by talented chef Toby Leigh. Try the pork belly (cooked for nine hours) with salsify and mustard leaf, and be prepared to see the unusual on the menu. Awarded the only Michelin Bib Gourmand in Kent for three-course fine dining under £28, with set menus between £9.50 and £15.50.

The Sportsman Seasalter

Why here...

Set near the saltmarshes on the outskirts of Whitstable, this pub-turned-restaurant has captured the imagination and taste buds of critics all over, and has been awarded a Michelin star.

On the menu...

Chef patron Steve Harris is fanatical about local produce, even making his own sea salt and curing pigs' legs for his Serrano-style ham. The pork and lamb comes from nearby Monkhill Farm and the oysters and seafood from the sea on his doorstep.

Why here...

A hidden gem, this restaurant in Bromley has been consistently showered with accolades (Michelin star, 4 AA Rosettes). It offers superlative dining at very reasonable prices in a spacious, chic modern dining room.

On the menu...

The chef, Andrew McLeish, is passionate about local and seasonal ingredients, and sources as much as possible from the Garden of England. His refined cooking style is modern European but reflects his classical training, with great attention paid to detail in flavour and presentation. His piquant starter of mackerel escabesche has become a regular star on the menu, as has his assiette of desserts, which showcases half a dozen of his delicious sweets in miniature.

WALKS

Meander around the beautiful, charming and historic capital of the Kentish Weald and discover a wealth of country delights

HERALDED as the capital of the Kentish Weald, Cranbrook has retained its village charm over the centuries. This circular three-mile (4.8km) walk gives visitors the chance to uncover the delights of this charismatic Kentish village set in wonderful countryside surroundings.

Our expedition starts in the heart of Cranbrook, close to the White Horse Inn, which has two distinct parts to it – an informal dining area with an ever-changing menu and a bar.

Four ales are always on tap and wine is served by the bottle or glass.

Also in the area is Apicius, a Michelin-starred restaurant with a top-class chef that has featured in many of the best eating-out guides.

Serving locally-sourced produce, it also has three AA Rosettes to its name and is one of the best places to eat in the county.

The village is a welcoming hive of activity, with lots of facilities and a wide range of shops lining the narrow medieval streets.

Towering above the houses, the familiar face of the Union Mill looks down like a fairytale giant on the village. Union Mill dates from 1814 and is the largest working windmill in England, measuring 72ft to the top of the cap. The mill is often open to the public and, wind permitting, wheat is ground and visitors can buy wholemeal flour in the shop.

Views from the mill look out across the outstanding countryside and give visitors the chance to fully appreciate the panorama.

Leaving the hustle and bustle of Cranbrook, we follow the High Weald Landscape Trail for a short time. The trail runs from Horsham to Rye covering 90 miles, on average taking experienced walkers about seven days to complete.

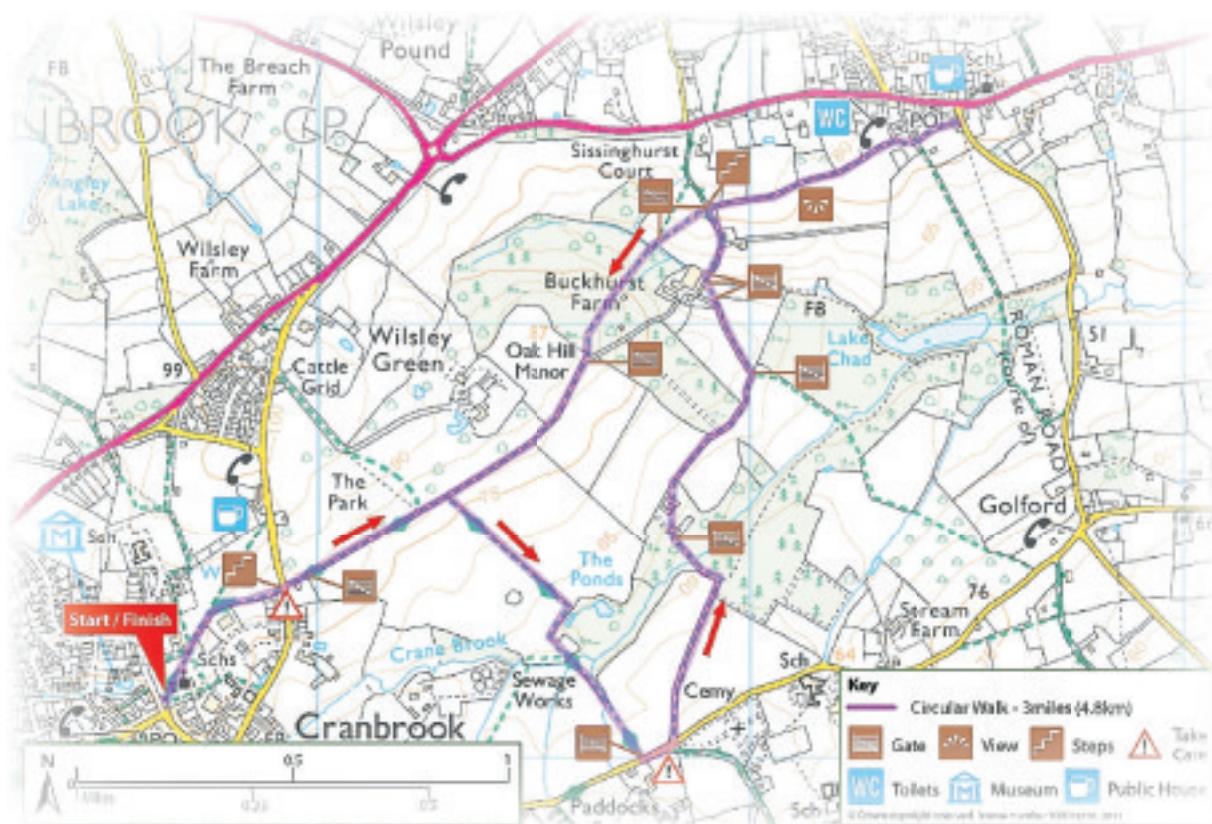

The word Weald means wilderness or forest, but if you look closely at the area you will notice it's made up of a lot more than just woodland. Rolling hills, fields and heathland adorn the area with scattered farms and quiet lanes.

Continuing along the route, walkers may wish to take a short diversion to Sissinghurst village, which can provide a welcome break for weary travellers.

An essential visit here is Sissinghurst Castle Gardens, which is managed by the National Trust and open to the public. The garden was created in the 1930s by Vita Sackville-West, poet and writer, and her husband Harold Nicolson, author and diplomat.

The gardens are designed as a series of rooms, each with a different character, colour and theme, divided by high clipped hedges and pink-brick walls. There are also woodland and lakeside areas surrounding the gardens, which can provide walkers with an ideal spot for a picnic. Or if you prefer to travel light when exploring the area, there is a restaurant and shop situated conveniently in the grounds.

Also in the grounds is the five-star Sissinghurst Castle Farmhouse, a bed-and-breakfast ideally placed as a base from which to view some of the finest landscapes in England.

 Open 9.30am to 6pm

TOP county attraction Howletts Wild Animal Park has defied the recession and is riding high with the new one-day ticket that allows visitors to come back for a whole year for free. The Howletts Passport allows visitors to enjoy the park for 12 months for the price of just one standard day-entry ticket. The park has been open to the public since 1975 and is home to more than 50 species of some of the most iconic wildlife on the planet, including gorillas, Sumatran tigers, black rhino and the largest herd of African elephants in the UK. Howletts chief Bob O' Connor said: "We aimed the scheme at local residents so that they might enjoy the park and facilities time and time again, but our data shows that it is also proving popular further afield. Howletts is an action-packed day out with a lot to see and do, but the park is also an ideal place just to meet friends for a coffee or pop in with the kids for an hour on the weekend. The park is right now celebrating the arrival of two Western lowland gorillas born within a month of each other as part of the breeding programme." For more information, visit www.aspinalfoundation.org/passport. The cost of the passport is £18.95 for an adult and £14.95 for a child, with concessions available.

GARDEN-LOVERS can get their teeth into which plants are past it and which flowers are fashionable with the Gardeners' Question Time tour. Arguably one of Britain's most famous and endearing institutions, BBC Radio 4's green query consultation embarks on an autumn trip to Kent. For the first time, resident chair Eric Robson will take his panel of expert gardeners including Chris Beardshaw, Matt Biggs, Bob Flowerdew, Pippa Greenwood and Bunny Guinness to the Leas Cliff Hall in Folkestone and the Assembly Hall Theatre in Tunbridge Wells. Each night Eric will be joined by three members of the panel as they display their unrivalled gardening expertise directly to loyal followers across the UK. The live setting will allow the horticulturists the chance to share their most memorable experiences as gardening experts and, of course, recount anecdotes of life on tour. There will be demonstrations about best gardening practice and advice on how to overcome both common and unusual garden problems. Tickets for the Gardeners' Question Time Tour are on sale now priced at either £21.50 or £22.50. ## Exhibitions & Events

Art Soldier paints strong image

I-Scream and Rock Gallery
Margate
Open daily 10am-7pm
Tel: 07935 102790

THE powerful new exhibition Symbols of Society documents a former soldier's salvation through art. Glenn Fitzpatrick, Fitzy, has spent the past 20 years recovering from his time in the first Gulf War. Those two decades have been filled with trials including drug abuse and post traumatic stress disorder in addition to undergoing pioneering surgery to remove a cyst on a vital area of his brain. Fitzy, originally from Gravesend, recovered through his art. After gaining a Bachelor's degree in fine art at UCA, he later completed his Master's. He also wrote a graphic novel called Arts And Mines in which he documented his experience of combat through his blunt, blackly comic illustrations. His work has been exhibited in London's Brick Lane Gallery and is set to appear at the new I-scream and Rock Gallery in Margate. The exhibition features black-and-white montage drawings in which figures are gracefully but provocatively entwined. The exhibition is open to the public until Monday, May 2, from 10am to 7pm daily. Entry is free. Visit www.isscreamandrock.wordpress.com for more details.

Riverside Country Park
Gillingham

Tel: 01634 843666

GALLANT knights, fish and chips and tea on the village green are just a taste of the 2011 St George's Day festival in Gillingham. Due to be held at the Riverside Country Park, the celebration of the patron saint follows the huge success of last year's free family festival which drew more than 8,000 people. This year the park will be split into six themed zones, including a medieval arena featuring St George himself accompanied by a 10ft animatronic dragon and a pirates play area, with specially-made beach complete with deckchairs and donkey rides. There will also be a chance to revisit the swinging sixties and a central high street housing food stalls offering a variety of favourites, from the family butchers to the great British curry. The St George's Day Festival at Riverside Country Park is being held on Saturday, April 23, 11am to 5pm. Steadily working the comedy circuit throughout the mid-noughties, in 2010 Imran debuted his solo show at the Laughing Horse Free Festival, part of the Edinburgh Festival Fringe. His five-star reviews led to a nomination for Best Newcomer at the Fosters Edinburgh Comedy Awards. ### Chekhov comes to Canterbury

The Gulbenkian, Canterbury

Tuesday, May 3, 7.45pm
Tickets £14, 01227 769075 or www.thegulbenkian.co.uk

A SERIES of short plays by the Russian dramatist Chekhov comes to the Gulbenkian Theatre in Canterbury in May. The European Arts Company is staging productions of the playwright's one-act farces The Evils Of Tobacco, The Dimwit, The Bear, Swan Song and The Proposal. The short plays were written between the writers' short stories and before the full-length plays for which Chekhov is best known, such as The Seagull and The Cherry Orchard.

Director Jonathan Kemp said: "They represent an important moment in the development of Chekhov as a writer. They combine all the tragic-comic beauty of the longer plays with the silliness of a sketch show." Chekhov is the second most popular playwright in the world after Shakespeare and 2010 was the 150th anniversary of his birth.

BOOK REVIEWS

King Of The Badgers

Philip Hensher

Fourth Estate £18.99

PHILIP Hensher joined the great pantheon of 'Ouch... he shoulda won, really' authors in 2008 when the Man Booker panel passed over his epic novel, The Northern Clemency.

Its follow-up, King Of The Badgers, sees us on similar ground as the author takes a look at an England in the grip of more and more invasive activities from the authorities.

There's a mystery to be solved in this book – the riddle of a missing eight-year-old girl – but there's just as much interest in this incident's effect on the residents of a small English seaside town at the mouth of the Bristol Channel.

The book also focuses on the people that the mystery/tragedy draws in, and the intimacies, desires and secrets that are exposed as a result.

The result is sometimes unsettling, taking you places you never expected to go with its big cast of characters, but also curiously lyrical.

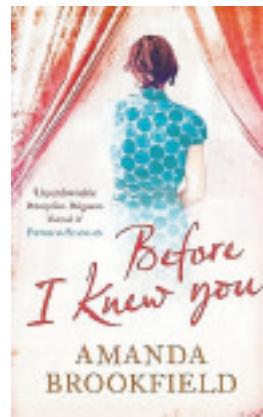

scathing and humane, with a devilishly good post-modern twist.

The plot centres on an actor's birthday celebration, where Michael, a nerdy sub-editor who was given his boss's invitation, struggles to find his feet amid the glitz and glamour of the occasion.

He manages to strike up an unlikely friendship with the host, until their budding relationship is threatened by a tragic accident.

It is accompanied by a series of emails from the novel's fictional author to his agent discussing the work-in-progress, which makes for compelling reading, especially as the author's relationship progresses alongside the book he is writing.

The main story is a well-written stab into the heart of celebrity culture, peeling back celebrity stereotypes, while the emails from author to agent add an impressive post-modern edge.

Before I Knew You

Amanda Brookfield

Penguin, £6.99

If you love Joanna Trollope, then Amanda Brookfield is also for you.

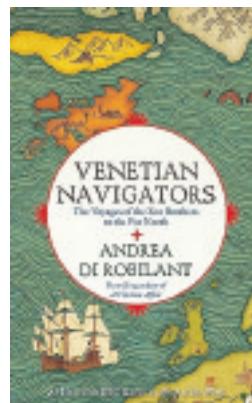

The latest novel by the best-selling author of Life Begins follows the journeys experienced by two very different couples as they switch houses in London and Connecticut.

While Londoners Sophie and Andrew are falling further apart every day, newlyweds William and his American wife Beth are still very much in the first flushes of love.

The polarisation of the relationships is cleverly deconstructed when they swap homes for the summer, an idea suggested by a mutual friend who thinks it would be the perfect solution for all of them – enabling William to spend time with his three sons, and providing Andrew and Sophie with a much-needed holiday to fix their problems (or so Andrew believes).

Thought-provoking and full of twists and turns, Brookfield's characters quickly resonate as their passions and anxieties honestly reflect the difficulties many of us face.

Venetian Navigators: The Voyages To The Far North

Andrea di Robilant

Faber and Faber £18.99

JOURNALIST Andrea di Robilant's third non-fiction book traces the obscure 14th-century voyages of Venetian nobles Nicolo and Antonio Zen, as recounted by their descendant, Nicolo the Younger, who was denounced as a fraudster in the late 1900s.

Intrigued, di Robilant set out to discover whether the account of their journey to seven islands in the North Atlantic could be true after all.

Venetian Navigators is an enjoyable, approachable exploration of travel narrative, mixing di Robilant's contemporary expedition to the Faroe Islands, Orkney, Shetland, Iceland and Greenland with research into the maritime and political history of Venice, Scotland, Scandinavia and even exploration of the New World as he struggles to identify strange nations on an ancient map.

His conclusions hinge on a few assumptions and Nicolo the Younger's reputation as a geographer is not fully restored, but the book is otherwise carefully researched, informative and engaging for a wide audience, especially those with an interest in the early days of America and the exploration of the New World by European explorers such as Marco Polo and Henry the Navigator.

Dr Who – New series

Saturday, April 23 – BBC1

ONE OF Doctor Who's leading characters is to be killed off by a mystery astronaut in the upcoming season of the series which starts next week, but TV chiefs are tight-lipped as to which cast member is to be written out.

Karen Gillan, who plays Amy Pond, might be the unlucky one to get the axe, or she might be saved if her boyfriend Rory Williams (Arthur Darvill) or time travelling archeologist River Song (Alex Kingston) faces the dismal on-screen fate instead.

As the new BBC1 show returns to our screens a new string of scary aliens are set to cause a stir and shake up the scare factor of the show rivaling past monsters such as the Daleks, Cybermen and Autons.

The aliens, named The Silence, are said to be more frightening than any in the show before – including the Weeping Angels which fans of the series have voted as the most frightening recent creations following the show's hugely successful revival.

The terrifying creatures will debut in the opening episode of the new series and threaten to conquer the Earth with their powers. One of their abilities allows them to wipe the memory of humans, so anyone who sees them and then looks away will forget ever having seen them.

Doctor Who boss Steven Moffat, 47, created the new characters and wanted them to be scarier than any other baddies that have been on the show to date to keep alive its tradition of fans watching from behind the sofa.

He said: "I think the idea is very cool. Imagine going downstairs and you can't remember if there was something upstairs."

Doctor Who himself, 28-year-old Matt Smith, said: "They're scary, repulsive and frightening."

Last series saw Smith become one of the most popular doctors as he took over from previous Tardis resident David Tennant.

Bean leads the fantasy battle for Throne of Westeros

THE much talked about new series starring Sean Bean is set to continue the trend of high budget, mega tv shows coming to our shores from the U.S.

Being shown on the ever impressive Sky Atlantic, the HBO creation has been classed as a fantasy drama based on George RR Martin's A Song Of Ice And Fire novels.

The 10-part series has been advertised heavily featuring dark, gothic and sinister one liners hiding the true nature of the show ensuring the heavy dose of intrigue helps to propel the show into the stratosphere before it even kicks off.

Game of Thrones

Mondays – Sky Atlantic, 9pm

Game of Thrones chronicles the violent dynastic struggles among noble families for control of the Iron Throne of Westeros.

Lord Eddard Stark (sean Bean) is torn between his family and an old friend when he is asked to serve at the side of King Robert Baratheon. But neither man is aware that their country is on the verge of a bitter power struggle that could lead to its destruction.

Directed by Tim Van Patten, the television series is expected to follow the novels quite closely after George RR Martin confirming the final script had been faithful to his work.

The stunningly shot story is set in the fictional kingdom of Westeros, where summers can span decades and winters can last a lifetime.

Game Of Thrones is definitely one for the fan-

Now Davina finds lost big brothers

Long Lost Family

Thursday, April 21 – 9pm, ITV1

THE new reality series stars Big Brother mainstay Davina McCall and long time Radio DJ Nicky Campbell as they help members of the public track down loved ones.

Long Lost Family aims to reunite real life estranged family members after years of separation.

This first episode in the series sees the presenters meeting up with Jennifer Wilson from Rotherham.

At the age of 11, Jennifer discovered that she had a twin sister from whom she had been separated at birth. Jennifer has always felt as though a part of her was missing and has spent a lifetime searching for her twin.

The presenters are charged with meeting the family and friends of each subject and helping to piece together the mystery.

The hour long show features two Long Lost Family stories with the opening episode also featuring Karen Lloyd from Warwickshire.

Karen found as a child that the woman she knew as her older sister was in fact her mother. She also discovered the truth about her father who disappeared before she was born. Karen has spent 20 years looking for him and with the help of Davina and Nicky, her search maybe at an end.

The six part series will no doubt draw audiences as the acute possibility of negative reactions from uncovered relatives threaten to upset the "perfect ending" applecart.

Although not a new concept, the show should provide some entertainment with reality television looking for a new front runner after the very slow and painful death of Big Brother.

The Eagle

12A, 114 mins

A BRAVE and noble son atones for the sins of his father in Kevin Macdonald's swords-and-togas epic, based on the novel The Eagle Of The Ninth by Rosemary Sutcliff.

Set in the wilds of 140AD England and Scotland but partly filmed in Hungary, The Eagle pits the might of the Rome Empire against the barbarism of the indigenous tribes, who slit the throats of their badly-behaved children.

Channing Tatum strides manfully into the breach as the emotionally and physically scarred hero of the hour, coping well with the rigours of Jeremy Brock's screenplay that includes some bone-crunching battle sequences.

Tomorrow, When The War Began

12A, 103 mins

SEVENTEEN-year-old Ellie (Caitlin Stasey) asks her parents if she can borrow the family Land Rover so she can drive her friends to a remote sinkhole known as 'Hell' for one final hurrah before the school holidays end. Best friend Corrie (Rachel Hurd-Wood) and her jock boyfriend Kevin (Lincoln Lewis), beauty queen Fiona (Phoebe Tonkin),

A skirmish between the legionnaires and the heathens at the beginning of the film, the latter charging into the fray on chariots with blades affixed to wheels, is thrillingly captured by cinematographer Anthony Dod Mantle and editor Justine Wright.

Blood and mud spatter the camera lens as swords clash and sinews ripple, at least one soldier losing a limb as those horse-drawn carriages scythe through Roman defences.

Underpinning the barbarism is the unlikely friendship between master and slave, whose distrust must be put to one side as they venture north of Hadrian's Wall in search of a military trophy.

In 120AD, the entire Ninth Legion disappears without trace in Scotland and its standard, a golden eagle, is lost forever, to the eternal shame of Rome.

The commander of those soldiers also vanishes and 20 years later, his son, Marcus Aquila (Tatum), accepts a posting in Roman-occupied southern Britain to learn the truth about his father's demise.

The young soldier is badly injured protecting his men and he recuperates with the help of his uncle (Donald Sutherland) and slave boy Esca (Jamie Bell), whom Aquila saves from certain death in the gladiator's ring.

"I hate you and everything you stand for, but you saved my life and I must serve you," seethes Esca.

Once he has regained his strength and mobility, Aquila heads north in search of answers accompanied by Esca, a member of the tribe of savages responsible for slaying the Ninth.

The Eagle hinges on the rapport between the leads and Tatum is impressive, bringing physicality and emotional vulnerability to his role.

Bell pales by comparison but gets his moment to shine in a touching scene when Esca defies the orders of Aquila and refuses to leave the badly-wounded Roman to his untimely fate.

With Tatum and Sutherland cast as Romans, British co-stars must adopt unconvincing American accents for the sake of continuity.

Mark Strong comes off worst as one of the long-lost members of the Ninth who charges into battle to protect Aquila in his hour of need.

HOMES

■ Maben's studio kitchen installation in lime is the ultimate in convenience and offers the best use of space possible with all the appliances you will ever need. Prices start from £6,000.

Laurence Llewelyn-Bowen is the brand ambassador for Maben Kitchens, which has branches throughout Kent. He shares his thoughts on the best kitchen trends for the year ahead...

THE kitchen is a very important, very emotive part of the house. After all, it's the heart of the home. To get the best use of space and to accommodate all of its uses you need to think of it as more of a reception room rather than just a machine for cooking in.

Kitchen design can sometimes be too mechanical, too much about the specifics and practicalities of cooking, when in fact the kitchen can also be about entertaining, about eating, about socialising – it should be about conversation.

"We've seen it in 2010, but certainly in 2011 the kitchen has to start becoming more like a living room because it is more often than not the most used room in the house. It has to be flexible enough to accommodate a whole variety of different functions, but it's also got to be comfortable enough for you to spend time in.

"More people are also going to be encouraged to showcase their favourite items of china or glassware on wall shelving rather than keeping them tucked away.

"Storage needs to be clever and designed around how you use the kitchen each day, but while this is going on behind closed doors and drawers, people will also put more out on display.

"The kitchen is the heart of the family home, where meals are made and conversations shared, which is why people are still pushing down the boundaries and opening up their space so that living, dining and cooking areas become united.

"2011 will be about the 'living kitchen' as designers seek to bridge the gap between living and cooking space by introducing practical yet furniture-inspired breakfast bars and island units plus more technology to keep everyone – from the cook to the child – happy.

"People will take more time to sit down together over meals and will favour staying in the kitchen, rather than migrating to the living room. Furthermore, people will be showing off their cooking prowess with kitchens that are designed for entertaining – impressing guests with their wok skills or cooking on a kitchen island unit and serving straight to plate.

"People often say 'less is more,' but not for 2011. Colour? Curves? Texture?

Kitchens will be about one, if not all, of these.

"Curves add a gorgeous fluidity to kitchen design – keeping ergonomics high on the agenda and making the space undeniably social. For dinner with a difference, curved island units will make a big impact.

"We'll also see more interesting textures emerge in design and this is all about subtlety. Texture shouldn't be overpowering, it should be a hint that perhaps accents the overall design without overshadowing it.

"And when it comes to colour, zesty and rich tones are going to be the shades of favour for those not faint of heart. Colour is very personal and often something of debate, but expect to see some strong shades in 2011.

"Don't be scared – all you need to do to make this work for you is to use colour as a feature or pair it with a more muted accent colour so you make an impact but don't become overwhelmed.

"The year of 2011 is about doing something new, and whether you choose a subtle style statement with texture or opt for a more bold kitchen with a vibrant colour, you won't regret going for something different.

"Everlasting in appeal, white kitchen units can bring a real sense of space to any kitchen. It is a look that won't fade and can be updated by changing the wall colour and accessories as trends come and go or when you simply want a change.

"White can be quite a bold choice, in fact, so if this is the look for you in 2011, keep it simple.

"For modern kitchens, stainless-steel appliances and black-gloss accents are ideal, such as those seen in Maben's curvaceous Ellipse kitchen. Leave the flashes of design and colour to your accessories, from blinds to plates and glasses.

THIS home occupies one of the best positions of any house in Nevill Court – one of the most desirable areas of Tunbridge Wells. It allows for stunning views over the delightful gardens and into the picturesque countryside beyond.

The house was built in the early 1930s using brick, timber and cement under a pitched tile roof.

The present owners have lived there for almost 30 years and it is an excellent family house, ideally suited to children of any age.

The accommodation is light and well proportioned and everything about the home is beautifully presented, with its Tudor style giving the property a unique character.

Despite its impressive size and great condition, the property still presents further opportunities for improvement or enlargement, subject to the usual planning consents being obtained.

Among the most attractive features are a superb hall, attractive dining room with views and a door on to a terrace as well as a beautiful kitchen/breakfast room with Corian working surfaces, an extensive range of cupboards and drawers, integrated appliances, an island unit, space for a breakfast table and windows to two aspects.

The large lobby has a walk-in storage cupboard and the music room offers two aspects and is extremely well positioned to make the most of the stunning views – making it ideal for inspiration.

The first floor features an attractive landing and the master bedroom has windows to three aspects, along with built-in wardrobe cupboards and an en-suite shower room.

The guest room has a built-in wardrobe and windows to two aspects and can be a self-contained suite if required. Two further bedrooms and a pair of bathrooms complete the floor.

The property has an impressive driveway with electric gates, a tarmacaded drive, extensive parking, two double garages and a workshop.

The gardens are a distinctive feature of the property and are principally laid to lawn, interspersed with mature trees and shrubs.

Tunbridge Wells itself is a historic town, offering a wide range of shops, including a selection of boutiques and designer and specialist stores.

There is also a large selection of cultural amenities in the area, which includes a good choice of theatres and many restaurants, bars and pubs.

The choice of schooling locally is of a very high standard, including the private Holmewood House Preparatory School for Boys and Girls at Langton Green and Kent College at Pembury.

Farther afield there are also several excellent establishments in Tonbridge and Sevenoaks and the area still offers the option of a grammar-school education.

Leisure activities locally include riding and walking in the countryside, golf, top-class cricket and water sports at Bewl Water.

The mainline railway station is about one mile away and offers fast and frequent services to London and Ashford International Station, which has trains to the Continent.

■ Viewing is strictly by appointment through the owners' sole agents, Knight Frank, who can be contacted on 01892 515035.

FLORAL FARE: Colourful old houses on the seafront provide a delightful backdrop to Deal's social life

A combination to tempt anyone

HERITAGE and history combine with a modern-day seaside town to give Deal its unique appeal. A cultural hub for east Kent, it is also home to an award-winning pier, a newly-renovated arts centre and working fishing fleet.

The countryside meets the seashore in a place where the atmosphere of the past mixes with the best of the present with an eye to the future.

The town has recently come under the national spotlight as The Sunday Times focused its attention on the growing property market in east Kent.

Homes are available both for rental and to buy. Renting can produce some bargains, with flats, family homes and apartments all available – some for about £100 a week.

In the buying market the conservation area in the centre of the town is very popular, as is the seafront.

Prices range from the easily affordable to top-end homes costing more than £500,000.

More and more people are moving to the area because of its growing reputation as a cultural hub.

The older homes retain their period charm, but in recent months plans for a huge housing development in the Sholden area have been considered.

The developers claim that such a scheme would bring benefits to the area, but many people who live locally say that it is unnecessary, would take up valuable greenfield land and put too much strain on the infrastructure.

What attracts many people to Deal is its unique history as the town really started to flourish in the mid-1600s. In the age of sailing ships, the sheltered coast was a haven for ships and at times there would be hundreds anchored off the coast, bringing business and prosperity to the area.

But during the Victorian era it began to emerge as a tourist resort.

The first wooden pier was built in 1857; this was replaced by an iron pier in 1864. The current pier was opened in 1957 and had a new end-of-the-pier restaurant in 2008.

Looking back at the town from the end of the pier gives a snapshot of Deal's varied past as beautiful and colourful old houses along the seafront form the backdrop to the vibrant bustle of the shops, pubs, bars and restaurants.

Deal has one of three castles built along the coastline by Henry VIII and is open to the public.

It's a rugged castle, ideal for the kids to explore, with cellars and roofs giving views across the sea. Be sure to get the audio guide to make the most of your visit.

Also built by Henry VIII, Walmer Castle is still in use as the official residence of the Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports. The other Tudor fortification is a ruin.

The timeball tower along the seafront was built in 1820 and was originally a Semaphore tower. It was used to pass messages along the east coast to help the Coastal Blockade in its fight against smugglers.

In 1853 the timeball was built on the top of the building. The ball was dropped once a day at 1pm by direct electrical signal from Greenwich. This enabled ship chronometers to be set accurately, vital for navigation.

The sea has played a huge role in the town's prosperity and is commemorated in pub names, artworks and relics. It is still a major factor in bringing people to the area – with one-time visitors becoming frequent tourists and in turn many of them becoming residents.

PROPERTY SPOTLIGHT ON DEAL

What it makes it special

DEAL has an excellent range of shops, frequent markets, wonderful architecture and an award-winning pier with a restaurant on its end. It has a wide shingle beach with a Tudor castle overlooking the seafront. Architecture is varied and the narrow streets extremely atmospheric, while there is a thriving arts, music and cultural scene. There is an impressive range of places to eat and drink, varying from traditional pubs once home to smugglers to contemporary venues. Many of them are sited along the seafront.

Room to improve

THE area close to the town's gasometer needs renovation and this is happening, although at a slower pace than many residents had hoped for. Train services to other coastal towns and London are not as frequent as many travellers would like, but there is an ongoing campaign to get high-speed services to stop at the town station.

Prices

DEAL'S most popular areas are the conservation parts of the town, around the centre. Ben Smith, of Miles and Barr, said: "A home can be had in the conservation area, which includes Middle Street, for £165,000 up to £480,000 by the seafront. Walmer is a popular place to buy as well." Ease of access to the town centre from some of the more picturesque parts is another attraction to buyers. Susan Percy, of Reeds Rains, said: "There are a lot of good schools in Deal, so we see a lot of interest from families.

There are some people with second homes in the town because of its coastal location. It's not a 'kiss me quick' seaside place – it's one with history and heritage. It is popular with those looking for affordable homes. Around £140,000 will buy a good place."

Shops

TOWN motto is 'Befriend the Stranger' and with its many unique stores Deal is a good place to go for something a little different – staff in such shops will always be on hand to help the customer. It has a wide range of bookstores where many bargains and rare editions can be found and the town is home to one of the last remaining independent music stores. There are also specialty food shops and a good range of antique stores. There are several large supermarkets and the town centre is pedestrianised.

Schools

THE town and its surroundings have an excellent range of primary schools and it is also well served when it comes to secondary education. Deal Church of England Primary, Kingsdown and Ringwould Primary and Sholden Primary have all received outstanding results in the latest round of Government assessments. Secondary schools and colleges in the town and around have also benefited from recent reforms in structure and results have been positive.

Connections

BUSES serve the neighbouring towns of Walmer and Sandwich and also run to Canterbury, some reasonably direct and others via villages on a half-hourly basis. There are also two buses every hour linking the town with Dover. Trains run to Ramsgate and to Dover, where they continue on to Ashford International, which has connections to Paris, Brussels and Lille and then on to London. The Channel Tunnel shuttle service is in Cheriton, half an hour away by car.

What's on

THE Astor Theatre is one of the top venues in Kent for cultural events. Big-name acts who have played there recently include Dr Feelgood, Wishbone Ash and Hazel O'Connor. There are also cabaret nights featuring local and national names and there are opportunities for bands from east Kent to perform. Workshops are held during the day focusing on such things as painting, drawing and creative writing. Smugglers Records is a local label that encourages the development of talent from the area. Fishing from the pier is extremely popular and a folk festival held annually attracts thousands of visitors to the town.

Around and about

NEIGHBOURING Walmer has its own castle with excellent gardens and occasional outdoor film showings. Sandwich is one of the most complete medieval towns in Britain and has frequent festivals. It also has a number of nature reserves and seal-spotting trips are run from the quayside of the River Stour. Inland, Canterbury is immediately accessible with its world-class UNESCO-protected cathedral and surroundings as well as a wide range of shops, bars, cafés and restaurants. Dover with its castle and White Cliffs is also very close, as is Thanet with its beaches, Charles Dickens-related heritage and modern retail at the Westwood Cross shopping centre.

Year-round popularity key to resort success

RENTED properties in Deal can be obtained at a wide range of prices – from flats at below £100 a week to family homes at four times that amount.

Despite not having a university or college and a lack of large businesses, the scene remains a positive one.

Some companies, including Miles and Barr, are looking to increase their stock and want to hear from people who are interested in renting out rooms.

Bob Humphries, of Bank House Properties, said: "The rental scene has been buoyant for a number of years.

"In some ways this is a bit of a mystery as there is no further-education establishment and heavy industry has declined with the closure of the pits.

"But it is a very good place to live – seaside towns are always popular so it seems that people have taken the decision to stay in the area and work elsewhere. Demand for rented homes has never gone away."

Popular areas for renting include the conservation zone close to the town centre, along the seafront and some of the older estates which were put up to house miners when the coal industry was at its height.

Mr Humphries also thinks Deal's stores and amenities add to its popularity among those renting a home. "In some seaside towns you see them shut down over the winter when tourists are not coming and the whole place seems dead," he said.

"But that is not the case in Deal. It's a 52-week-a-year town. I cannot think of a single scene which closes its doors for the winter."

The town's renting scene has of course been affected by national conditions. Across much of the country, low mortgage-approval rates have pushed up the value of property rentals in recent months.

First-time buyers are renting for longer as they are unable to get on the property market due to low mortgage-approval rates.

Just 32,300 mortgages were approved in February, which is 1.2 per cent down on this time last year – meanwhile, rents have increased in many areas.

The demand for property in the South East is at a high level, with supply outstripping demand in many areas.

Renting remains popular as well among those who are unable to get together enough money to pay a mortgage deposit as well as among those in part-time work and studying.

Deal has a number of properties that are second homes for people who enjoy having somewhere by the sea to go at weekends and during the summer. These are also often let out during the off season.

Retain your independence with McCarthy & Stone

After working hard all your life, don't you think you deserve a little pampering? Wouldn't it be nice to have someone else to do all the hard work for a change; to know that there is always someone under the same roof, to call on if you need help?

"They've thought of absolutely everything. We ran out of questions to ask!"

We're very happy we made the move. Both in our 80s, we look after each other as best we can but it's good to know now that there's someone on hand should either of us need help.

McCarthy & Stone's Assisted Living development of retirement apartments in Cheriton could be the answer.

Everything is designed for your comfort and convenience. You are an independent home-owner, but without the worries and responsibilities of a house and garden and round-the-clock support is available if you need it. Needless to say there is full wheelchair access throughout the building.

Flexible support services

Lunch is served every day in the waitress service restaurant and meals can even be bought to your apartment in the event of illness.

One hour's domestic assistance is included in the service charge but this service is totally flexible and extra assistance can be purchased to meet either long or short term needs. The same applies to personal care which is available from the appointed care agency.

Tailor-made facilities

The facilities at Laurel Court have been designed to ensure that you can do everything that you would do in your own home, but far more easily.

The apartments have a fitted kitchen, a level access shower in addition to a bath and full wheelchair access. Facilities also include a laundry and residents' lounge where you can socialise with fellow residents. For entertaining your visitors, there is a function room and a hotel style guest room shower for putting up family and friends.

Security brings peace of mind

Security is often a particular concern for the older homebuyer. Laurel Court benefits from advanced security systems like a 24-hour emergency call service and CCTV at the main entrance.

"It's perfect, just right for Mum."

Living on her own and so far away I was always worried for Mum. She struggled with everyday things but I couldn't help. Now she's on my doorstep and so well looked after. We're both really happy.

Where else could you find such a balance of independence and convenience under one roof?

Ultra-eco Passat best by miles

By Sam Davison

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

IT'S easy to scoff at carmakers claiming that a facelift is actually a new model.

And I thought I had Volkswagen bang to rights when I saw the latest Passat—the German marque's family saloon/estate contestant.

Apart from cosmetics making the car appear sharper and more aerodynamic, it looks like the previous 2005-2010 model.

And who could blame VW bosses for thinking "don't fix it if it ain't broke" when the old car was such a huge success, loved by a UK company car sector that grabs some 80 per cent of Passat sales.

Look more closely and check the detail though and this really is a new and generously spec'd 7th generation Passat (from £18,880).

Every panel and glass surface apart from the roof is new, while that glass is either thicker or laminated as part of a rigid sound-deadening regime already applied successfully to several other VW best sellers: the Passat might look like a clone, but it sounds and rides far better than before.

Added to that is the latest VW low consumption and CO2 emissions BlueMotion technology: all Passat diesels now carry the BM stamp and can take you to Mars and back on a tank of fuel.

The eco-friendly package includes battery recharging via braking and Stop/Start systems. This gives the entry-level 1.6-litre TDI an average mpg in the mid-60s and a barely road taxable 114 g/km of CO2 emissions.

But having helped switch us to diesel, VW is now in the vanguard to re-invent petrol as a credible alternative, so Passat options also include advanced economical and low emission petrol units, including a BlueMotion.

This is the turbocharged 1.4-litre 122PS (121bhp) with vital statistics that would have

VW PASSAT SE 2.0 TDI (DSG) BLUEMOTION: £23,585 FACT FILE

IT'S SIMPLY OUT OF THIS WORLD: The new Passat BlueMotion will take you to Mars and back on a single tank of fuel seemed incredible for this class just a few years ago: 0-62mph in 10.3 seconds, a potential average of nearly 50mpg and CO2 emissions of just 138g/km.

Why bother though when diesels can do all that and usually better? Ah, but a diesel costs more to buy and fuel so you need to run it for more miles before starting to claw back the benefits while, in the meantime, the heavier engine will be harder on tyres and front end mechanics.

And some of us yearn for the nimbleness and response of lighter petrol engines, so petrol may yet make a comeback, particularly as it suits smaller cars.

However, diesel remains king on Passat sales, despite those three petrol options and the UK best seller, with a 25 per cent share, should be the 2.0-litre TDI 140PS (139bhp) BlueMotion tested here.

And rightly so, as it shows impressive performance (0-62mph in 9.8 seconds), CO2 emissions of 119 g/km and an average of more than 60mpg, while being an all-rounder, at home on the motorway, open road, or in traffic.

The above figures apply to the saloon, but VW expects the capacious Passat Estate model to outsell its sister for the first time as many Brits turn more to estates as a classy alternative to boxy MPVs.

Many buyers may also be tempted by the twin-clutch DSG auto too. It featured on the test car and while it adds an eye-watering £1,600 to the price, repays in convenience and little or no penalty in performance and economy, while allowing the car to be driven like a manual if required.

My one criticism of the Passat is that the roomy and robust cabin needed more razzazz this time around.

I hopped straight from the test car into a Vauxhall Insignia and was seduced by its curvy lines and style – a memo for the next Passat facelift perhaps?

First GEAR MOTORING NEWS

Range Rover baby on way

RANGE Rover's all-new baby, the Evoque, will start at under £28,000 when it arrives here soon. Dealers are readying themselves for the rush from RR buyers still wanting their prestige while being seen to go green. However, they may sacrifice the brand's go-anywhere legend to do so – entry models come in front-wheel drive only – 4x4 models start at £28,705.

New Picanto pick of bunch

KIA is launching its second-generation Picanto city car. The original five-door hatchback was pivotal for the ambitious Korean brand, ushering in a spate of radical and higher quality Kias which attracted a new band of buyers. The latest Picanto is better looking and more sophisticated, cementing Kia's reputation nowadays as a major player on the UK market.

Mazda out to top its rivals

MAZDA'S new MX-5 GT race car also highlights the premier sales season for the car that launched Britain's current craze for open-top motoring. The GT will contest the Britcar MSA British Endurance Championship 2011 with a 0-60mph time of just three seconds and 160mph maximum, helped by dramatic weight loss and increased power.

Motability is living up to its name

TOP SELLER: The market-leading midi people carrier, the Vauxhall Zafira pioneered the concept of allowing all five rear seats to be folded away quickly. It can be anything from a van to a full seven-seater within moments.

HIGH-SPEC: Hyundai i30 - the Korean brand's family hatchback and estate range offers sophistication and many standard features.

PEOPLE with disabilities and their families have been liberated by the modern-day Motability scheme.

It not only enables them to get on the road for much less than it would cost them to buy or lease a new or nearly-new car privately, but it also helps them with the often-costly adaptations for controls or wheelchair access.

But Motability does not rest on its laurels. The Government-backed organisation continues to review and refine the scheme.

A recent innovation allows customers who have driven less than 15,000 miles by the end of their agreement to now extend the lease.

There is also a £250 Good Condition Bonus, Motability's way of saying

'thank you' to customers for looking after a car.

And the online Car Search tool has been upgraded to help prospective customers find their perfect match from some 4,000 models available through the scheme.

No matter how people start their search, it can help compare up to four cars side by side and build a short-list for saving, or printing out to take to the local Motability dealer.

There are also more images of the cars, reviews from WhatCar? and, if a customer is looking for a car that allows them to remain in their wheelchair when travelling, then the all-new Search by Wheelchair Accessible Vehicle function helps find the best match.

DRIVE THE WORLD'S SPORTIEST COMPACT CAR FROM £99 ADVANCE PAYMENT FOR MOTABILITY CUSTOMERS.

Model shown is the Alfa MiTo Turismo 1.4 16v 96 bhp. Official fuel consumption figures for the Alfa MiTo Turismo: Urban 36.7 mpg (7.7 l/100km); Extra Urban 58.9 mpg (4.8 l/100km); Combined 47.9 mpg (5.9 l/100km); CO<sub>2</sub> emissions 138 g/km.

Offer subject to availability and available while stocks last.

The MiTo offers state of the art automotive engineering and comes with a special electronic control system, Alfa Romeo D.N.A. Taken straight from the world of racing, this feature can adjust the responses of the car depending on the driving style and conditions. The Electronic Q2 system offers exceptional road holding, while MacPherson suspension and rebound springs ensure the superb handling you expect from a genuine Alfa Romeo.

Designed to satisfy the highest Euro NCAP rating, this car also offers optimum safety. All of these features combine to make the MiTo the sportiest compact car in the world.

Motability

– making money and motoring go further

LONG-running Motability customers will know of the hassle that can be avoided by letting it take care of everything – from insurance, maintenance and repairs, to breakdown assistance.

What may not be so familiar is how smart a choice Motability also makes when it comes to affordable motoring.

With the cost of living making headlines, Motability works hard to ensure its customers are offered a consistent range of great-value choices.

There are about 400 cars available with no Advance Payment, and many more with Advance Payments of less than £500, including a range of automatics and low-emission vehicles.

With comparable running costs for private cars rising, Motability makes great financial sense and customers have the comfort and security of knowing that the regular payment won't change over the years of the lease – whatever the economy brings.

And customers also need to remember that

LIVELY: Seat Altea – the Spanish MPV proves people carriers need not be dull. The Altea is available as a five-seater or in the stretched seven-seat XL (above) up to two named drivers can be included on the Motability insurance policy as part of the all-inclusive package; for a little bit extra, a third driver can be added for even more flexibility.

The need to change drivers during the lease can be accommodated, too, via a quick phone call.

Motability customers also find that the scheme can far more liberating than they dreamed, because it is easy to plan for foreign travel.

By phoning to obtain a free VE103 Vehicle on Hire Certificate, the leaseholder confirms that he or she is authorised to be in possession of the Motability lease car while abroad and Motability customers get a 20 per cent discount on RAC's European Breakdown Cover.

Adaptations

MOTABILITY offers some 300 adaptations to make driving, or travelling, more comfortable.

Many of the most popular adaptations are available at no extra cost when fitted at the start of the lease.

Motability recently relaunched its 'Your guide to adaptations', introducing the most popular types of adaptations and answering some of the most common questions.

For a copy, visit www.motability.co.uk or phone 0800 093 1000.

The easy and most cost-effective way of adapting the car is at the start a new Motability lease – customers need to pay for any adaptations that are added during the lease.

The service

MOTABILITY aims to provide the best possible service at all times, so it surveys some 600 customers twice-yearly to check their leasing experience matches expectations.

For the past three years the organisation has achieved an overall satisfaction rating of 97 per cent but also scooped three awards at the Top 50 Call Centres for Customer Service awards, winning Public Services and Best Newcomer and coming second place in the overall Top 50 chart.

STILL POPULAR: Renault Scenic is now into its third generation – the 5-7-seat Scenic range pioneered the midi MPV sector of the market, which has now developed into a huge business and is particularly attractive to Motability customers

Wheelchair-accessible vehicles

CROSSOVER:
Mitsubishi ASX – the Japanese marque's answer to the booming crossover sector (part MPV/SUV/family hatchback) is putting its dealerships on the map

DUAL-FUEL:
Proton GEN-2 – this Malaysian-built five-door family hatch or saloon is offered with dual-fuel petrol/LPG capability – liquid gas petroleum is roughly half the price of petrol and better for the environment

EXPERTS at Motability have worked hard to streamline the Wheelchair Accessible Vehicle (WAV) selection process.

In addition to the Guide to Wheelchair Accessible Vehicles, the organisation has launched the DVD A Steer In The Right Direction, exploring how to choose the right WAV to suit the needs of an individual customer.

The DVD follows three families on their quest to find the right vehicle and highlights the most important areas of consideration when selecting a WAV.

Lara Masters, who presents the 15-minute DVD, said: "It just goes to show that there's a lot to think about when choosing a WAV, and hopefully our new DVD will help you along the way." Copies are available via www.motability.co.uk or 0800 093 1000.

The website's Car Search tool can also provide information on a complete range of more than 600 WAVs.

And there is a Nearly New WAV scheme – a more affordable way to lease a WAV. Nearly New WAVs are available on a three-year lease, with a 60,000 mileage allowance, and offer an average saving of around £500 off the Advance Payment, when compared with an equivalent new WAV.

Nearly New WAVs are never more than two years old and come with low mileages and a full reconditioning by a Motability-approved supplier.

IMPROVED QUALITY:
Peugeot 3008 – this crossover has quickly become one of the most popular in the sector and also highlights the French marque's vastly improved cabin quality and design

Key points of Motability contract

- Lifestyle – Motability's free quarterly magazine for all customers goes out in February, May, August and November.
- Tax disc – Every year about 10 days before the tax disc expires, a new one is sent for the coming year, along with the Motability Ontrack bulletin.
- Service appointments
- Whenever a car's service is due (this varies for each car and might be every year or at a certain mileage point) the dealer contacts the customer to arrange for the work.

- Renewal – About three months before the end of the contract, customers get a renewal pack to remind them to choose a new car and highlight a selection of the best deals around.
- MOT – The dealer contacts the customer two months before the end of the contract to arrange the car's MOT test; most cars sail through without problems, but Motability pays for the test and any repairs needed due to general wear and tear.

- Hand back and collection – Dealer arranges for customers to collect their new car at the same place and day as they hand back the old.

TOURING CARS

WITH TIM HARVEY

Touring car legend TIM HARVEY has teamed up with Archant KOS Media this season to bring you a weekly column as he looks to retain his Porsche Carrera Cup title. Harvey, who was brought up in Sevenoaks and schooled in Tonbridge, is in his second spell with Wrotham-based team Motorbase Performance. He describes his defence of the Carrera Cup crown as well as sharing his thoughts, as an ITV commentator, on the British Touring Car Championship

'Honda to lead at Donington'

“We're all heading up to Donington Park for the second round of the British Touring Car Championship season this weekend, and I think again it is going to be very interesting.

Clearly Jason Plato had a great time of it in the Chevrolet at Brands Hatch two weeks ago, but the turbo-charged cars, particularly the Hondas, are very quick.

Each circuit is different and power is definitely going to be an advantage at Donington, so unless Jason can get himself at the front, he could struggle to pass them. Everyone tries to maximise their car at every race, but Donington Park is definitely going to favour the more powerful cars, so the Hondas of Matt Neal and Gordon Shedden will be trying to rack up as many points as they possibly can.

On a personal note, I'll be back in the commentary box as well as driving in the Porsche Carrera Cup races, but my schedule doesn't look too bad.

The first Carrera Cup race is at 9.20am on Sunday and we've then got a touring car race immediately before I get back behind the wheel in race two at 3.05pm. That's not too bad, though, because I can finish off my bit for TV, just back out of the commentary box and head down.

I've always gone well up at Donington, I've had many wins there and I enjoy it. It's been improved since they moved the front chicane back a bit.

Heading back to Motorbase after the first round at Brands, there was clearly work to be done on the Porsches. We're only talking about small tweaks here, but a few small tweaks can make quite a difference when you're talking about tyre performance. Donington's a different surface and we may well be able to optimise the car there in testing.

We're still in discussion with Porsche over the controversial weight issue; nothing's moved forward but we've compiled our evidence and we'll be presenting more evidence on a daily basis.

We don't give up, we'll keep fighting, but unfortunately the weight handicap is going to be worth three-tenths of a second up there.

There could be other issues, too, the weather could be a factor on the tyre performance over the duration of the race. We won't change our approach too much, but with this new car the set-up for qualifying and the race are two different things to work out.

SNOOKER

Hawkins desperate to end first-round jinx at Crucible

By David Pritchard

david.pritchard@archant.co.uk

KEEPING control of nervous tension will be key for Barry Hawkins as he looks to avoid a sixth successive first-round defeat at the World Snooker Championships next week.

The biggest event on the snooker calendar begins in Sheffield on Saturday, with Hawkins' last-32 meeting with Stephen Maguire played over two sessions on Monday.

Although reaching the hallowed baize at the Crucible is the highlight of the year, the famous theatre has not been kind to the Dartford potter. His five previous trips to South Yorkshire have been brief affairs, always returning back to Kent after falling at the first hurdle.

It began with a 10-1 thrashing at the hands of former world champion Ken Doherty in 2006, when Hawkins first experienced the sinking feeling.

"I won the first frame and thought 'this is alright', but then it hit me all of a sudden where I was and it unsettled me," he said. "I hardly potted anything for the rest of the match."

"That's what the place can do to you, it can make you freeze if you're not careful. It's a great place to play if you're going well because of the atmosphere, but it is a horrible place if things start to go wrong. You try to make yourself believe it's the same as every other venue, but when you see the buzz around it you realise it's bigger than the rest of the year; it's special."

Hawkins has shown flashes of his best form at the championships. For two years in a row he suffered the anguish of being eliminated following a final frame decider, while last year he led defending champion John Higgins 5-3 before losing seven of the next eight frames.

The world number 26, who will celebrate his 32nd birthday at the tournament if he makes it to the second round next weekend, practised with Joe Perry and defending champion Neil Robertson in Cambridge this week in an effort to discover his best form.

Hawkins had to come through qualifying just to earn the right of appearing in the first televised round, confidently progressing past the experienced Anthony Hamilton 10-5 at the English Institute of Sport in Sheffield last month.

Although he will start as an outsider to progress past Maguire, a top eight player and former UK champion, Hawkins knows an indifferent season could be transformed by a run to the latter stages.

He said: "It would be lovely to see what it feels like to get to the second round. From then on the matches are played over three sessions so you really feel part of the tournament - going out in the first couple of days you're not really in the thick of it.

"If you can get through the first round sometimes the draw can open up for you. If you miss the bigger names all of a sudden players can find themselves in the quarter-finals and then anything can happen."

"One thing I have in my favour perhaps is I'm a bit fresher than a few of the players because I haven't played too much."

MOTORSPORT

Gilham's late deal nets a BTCC stay

FEARS Tony Gilham would be unable to take his place on the grid at Donington this weekend were averted after a last-minute sponsorship deal.

The 31-year-old was quick on his British Touring Car Championship (BTCC) debut at Brands Hatch a fortnight ago, claiming a hat-trick of top-10 finishes in his Vauxhall Vectra.

But the fast start was threatened by the withdrawal of a major sponsor, which left the Dartford driver contemplating missing out this weekend. Fortunately the extreme measure was staved off when an existing backer, Collins Contractors, increased his commitment to the 888 Racing team. A long-term sponsor is still needed, but Gilham is relieved to be lining up on the grid this weekend.

He said: "It was absolutely last-minute stuff, but we'll be at Donington and that's the main thing."

MOTORSPORT

Jackson looks to chase Plato at Donington Park

MOTORBASE Performance are at Donington this weekend looking to build on their encouraging start to the British Touring Car Championship (BTCC).

Competing as Airwaves Racing, the team's new Ford Focus cars were among the quickest in the field at the opening round at Brands Hatch earlier this month.

Mat Jackson heads to the Leicestershire circuit looking to build on two podium finishes in the first three races, with early championship leader Jason Plato in his sights.

The 29-year-old believes the fast, undulating circuit will be a good match for the Focus.

He said: "I'm looking forward to Donington as I think it will suit our car well and with the progress that we made at Brands Hatch it looks likely it could produce some great results for us."

The pressure will be on Jackson's team-mate, Liam Griffin, who failed to score a point on his BTCC debut at Brands after making the step up from the Porsche Carrera Cup. Dartford's Tony Gilham will also be representing the county, driving for 888 Racing in a Vauxhall Vectra.

The first of Sunday's three races begins at 11.25am.

INJURED: Azhar Mahmood

Azhar keen to stay with county past this season

PAKISTANI all-rounder Azhar Mahmood says he has no desire to bring an end to his colourful career as he enters the final year of his contract at Kent.

Out of contract at the end of this season, Mahmood is playing for an extension at Kent and believes at the age of 36, there's still more to come.

Despite being on a one-day deal at Kent, he played seven LV= County Championship games in Division One last year and hopes to play a similar number this season as the club look to gain promotion from Division Two.

"I am keen to play and am positive about playing championship cricket," he said. "I am on a one-day contract, but I have negotiated with the club that whenever they need me I will play championship cricket. I think it will be like last year, I played seven championship games and that was good for me because it gives me enough recovery time in between matches."

Mahmood, who played 143 One-Day Internationals and 21 Tests for his country, was due to play in the game at Essex last week, but has missed the beginning of the season with a hip and groin injury.

It's not clear at this stage how long he will be out for, but Mahmood, who signed for the county in 2007, wants to stay at Kent and play beyond his 18th year in first-class cricket.

He said: "This is my last season [of this contract], but I think I have still got a lot of cricket left in me."

"I still believe that I am fit and strong and as long as the body is up to it I want to carry on playing. I love the game so I am happy to keep going."

RECALLED: Charlie Shreck's returned to Notts

One-day selection vital to Northeast's future at Kent

EXCLUSIVE by Glenn Pearson

glenn.pearson@archant.co.uk

SAM Northeast says being left out of the Kent Spitfires' side in Twenty20 and one-day cricket last year was "a factor" in his decision to run down his contract at St Lawrence.

The 21-year-old made just a solitary appearance in the Clydesdale Bank 40 and wasn't included in the side for the Friends Provident t20 at all last summer.

His exclusion from limited overs cricket now appears to be the stumbling block after Northeast turned down a contract extension from the county during the winter, instead choosing to run down his final year before making a decision about where his future lies.

"It was my decision to run it down this year," he said. "If they were close to offering me to go out and play one-day and Twenty20 cricket then we would have a look at it. It is a factor [in why he has not signed], but I've got to put in the performances that will allow me to do that. There's no doubt about it, I won't just walk into a one-day side anywhere, I have to put in the performances."

"With the contract down I am not going to feel pressure, if anything it is a benefit because it is going to make me push that little bit harder. Kent have stood by me really well and it's a great club and it looks like it's going forward, but you do have to think of your own career as well."

Kent's issue has been finding a place for Northeast in their batting line-up in one-day cricket, having in the past opted for six batsmen with Azhar Mahmood in the all-rounder's position and four bowlers.

Northeast has consequently found a place in the side blocked by team-mate Alex Blake, who filled the number six spot last season, but the former England under-19 batsman is clear about his intentions for the future.

"The biggest thing for me this year is to try and get in that one-day team and I've got to do it in terms of me moving forward," he said. "I know the club don't perceive me as just a four-day cricketer, but there are players that have probably got a better one-day record than I do. I can see myself playing all forms of cricket and I really want to do that. I wouldn't be happy if I spent my whole career playing just four-day cricket, I wouldn't be satisfied with that.

TON UP: Sam Northeast scored the first century of the season, but is yet to sign a new deal at Kent

"It's a massive thing for me to get in that team, I have been working hard on my one-day skills and for me that's the next step."

The Ashford-born right-hander was the first player to score a hundred this season, hitting a match-winning 112 in Kent's opening LV= County Championship game of the season at Essex. He showed his ability to score quickly, hitting his first 50 in 108 balls, before opening up and smashing a second 50 in just 40 balls which included two sixes.

It was his first game batting at number three in the order and it's where he wants to stay.

He said: "I batted at three in Australia and I came back and said I wanted to bat there. Luckily enough Jonah [Geraint Jones] is happy batting five and everyone is happy with where they are in the order, so it's sort of worked itself out.

"I have always batted in the top three and enjoyed that, but batting at five last year - and I'm not making excuses for myself - you are waiting to bat and that's not necessarily something I like doing."

"You set the tone at the top and I prefer to do that than wait around for others to set the tone for you and I found that difficult mentally more than anything."

Farbrace not ruling out use of loan system in the future as Shreck returns to Trent Bridge

KENT'S director of cricket, Paul Farbrace, has not ruled out using the loan system again this season after Charlie Shreck was recalled just a week into his one-month deal with the county.

Shreck was signed on the eve of Kent's LV= County Championship opener against Essex last week after both Azhar Mahmood and Matt Coles were ruled out through injury. However, five days into his stay at St Lawrence, the 33-year-old was recalled by Nottinghamshire to play in their game with Hampshire, which finishes on Sunday.

With Kent's bowling department thin on numbers, Farbrace said the county would have no hesitation in using the system again if his front-line seamers were lost to injury.

He said: "The only advantage about being in Division Two is that some Division One sides are prepared to let you have some bowlers. [Notts] are not the only club I have spoken to, I have spoken to a few about the possibility of loans."

Robbie Joseph's return after almost two years out with a shoulder injury was a huge boost to the side, showing why he is so highly rated with figures of 4 for 25 in the second innings at Essex. Farbrace was pleased to see the 29-year-old back out on the field and said the challenge for the fast bowler is to remain fit and on form for the whole season.

He said: "Robbie is getting better and better every game he plays. He has had two pretty difficult years having spent a lot of time on his own trying to get fit and then there were a few people pointing the finger saying 'he is soft, he is weak' and that's just rubbish."

"The bloke has tried so hard and has bunt his gut trying to get himself fit and deserves to enjoy what he has done. But he knows as well as we do that it is only one game, you have to string games together before people will be convinced he is 100 per cent fit and firing."
